Newspapers, Illustrations, Maps, Recordings and Books on Cambridge, Cambridgeshire and Fenland

The Cambridgeshire Collection at Cambridge Central Library, Lion Yard, is the starting-point for 'research' into any aspect of Cambridgeshire
Since 1855 Librarians have tried to collect everything written Cambridge and its region, including the Fens, all of which may be freely consulted at the Central Library in Lion Yard, Cambridge

Former Librarian Mike Petty has compiled his own Collection of Cambridgeshire Books, Illustrations, Maps, Newspapers and Recordings, together with his own Writings.
Much of this material has been uploaded to Internet Archive and Google Photos where it may be freely consulted, downloaded and used.
This is a guide to some of that material
Revised 2024 07 24 2024 08 23 2024 12 31

residents. He gives moreover extracts from the registers (which date from 1548) showing the names of the parishioners, and indicates by the prices and valuations which he quotes the gradual progress of luxury and comfort. This book, originally intended as the history of a small Suffolk community, will be found to be of special interest not only to East Anglians, but to all, far and wide, who wish to know how their forefathers have fared and carried on parish life from the time of the Norman Invasion. ebk1030

The geology of the middle Cam valley; from Quartenary 2,24: 2019.
RIVER CAM. c.15 Note: Abstract: This study offers a new understanding of the stratigraphy and context of the Pleistocene (including Elsterian and Weichselian) and Holocene deposits of the Middle Cam valley and provides a unique and detailed view of the sediment architecture of these valley-fill and interfluve sediments. The new insights into the geology of the area, including dating, pollen analyses, and sediment architecture, are presented with reference to a series of nine cross-sections through Holocene and Pleistocene deposits, as well as Cretaceous bedrock across the region. The structural geology of the bedrock and the stratigraphic arrangement of younger deposits are used to explain the landscape evolution of the area. ebk1918

The origins of Cambridgeshire. From ‘Antiquaries Journal’ 1998
note: This paper examines the effects on the landscape of Anglo-Saxon immigration in a frontier zone, on either side of the Cam valley which formed the ancient boundary between East Anglia and Mercia. An examination of the place names, institutions and landscape archaeology on either side of the Cam frontier appears to reveal an unexpected degree of continuity in landscape use between the Roman and middle Saxon periods. This apparent continuity is more marked on the eastern side of the frontier which was subject to centralised East Anglian control from an early date, than on the western bank where political and administrative fragmentation is more easily demonstrable. ebk1928

OOSTUIZEN, S.
Landscapes decoded: the origins and development of Cambridgeshire's medieval fields.
Note: the landscape history of the Bourn Valley, just west of Cambridge, offers an opportunity to address the question of whether or not there was a complete break, at least in physical terms, between the field systems of Roman Britain and the common or open fields of medieval England. In unravelling the relationships between pre-open field and open field boundaries in the Bourn Valley between about 600 and 1100 AD, a significant step forward has been taken in understanding of the origins of medieval open field systems in general. It illuminates the processes through which the fields, woods and pastures that had developed over the prehistoric millennia and the Roman centuries were organised into a completely new landscape: that of the medieval open fields. Field work has uncovered preserved prehistoric field patterns in the medieval furlongs of the valley. The unexpected discovery of what appears to be an eighth or ninth century proto-open field pattern enables the formulation of a new model for the introduction of common fields in England. ebk1932

East Anglian fenland: water, the work of imagination and the creation of value. 2015.
This paper explores the social, economic, and moral significance of renegotiating the balance between ‘wet’ and ‘dry’, taking as its focus a particular British landscape: the East Anglian fenlands. The fens are a place where the Protestant Work Ethic has been inscribed on the landscape; labour cuts drainage ditches to bleed the peat, and creates productive land where once there was only feckless and lazy swamp. Or, to listen to the story another way: labour attempts to impose man's will on God's dominion, with disastrous consequences for humans and for other species. Through three stories – from the 17th century, the Second World War, and the early 21st century – I trace the flow of water, its exclusion, and re-emergence, and show that central dilemmas about the perceived morality and immorality of drainage persist as a key source of tension in the region, particularly given the emergence of projects to ‘re-wet’ and ‘re-wild’ the landscape.  c.44.2  c.29

This report presents the results of the 'Time Detectives' programme of archaeological excavation of 10 1m2 'test pits' in the Cambridgeshire village of Swaffham Bulbeck in spring 2012. The programme was funded by the Heritage Lottery Fund and was intended to enable schools pupils and adults affected by autism engaging with local charity Red2Green to work together to explore their local heritage. Over three days, more than 50 people took part in the excavations which provided new evidence for the development of the area now occupied by the village from the prehistoric period onwards. This appears to have been lightly used by humans in the prehistoric and Roman period until the late 9th century AD when a small settlement appears to have developed near the site of the present church. This settlement expanded north in the 12th-14th centuries, when a new planned extension, Newnham End, was founded. This period of growth ceased in the 14th century, when the new settlement may have been at least partly abandoned. Revival did not take hold until perhaps the 17th or 18th centuries. By successfully involving adults affected by autism, local primary and secondary school pupils and local residents in organising and undertaking the excavations, the 'Time Detectives' excavations enabled participants to find out more about autism and about their local heritage, and showed how effectively archaeological excavation can bring diverse people together. # SWAFFHAM BULECK # c.41: Swaffham Bulbeck

2024. BARROWCLOUGH, D.A. Expanding the horizons of island archaeology: landscapes imaginary & real, Ely: the case of the dry island. From: 'Shima' vol.4, no.1: 2010. Note: This paper takes as its starting point a definition of islands that goes beyond geographical isolation to consider islands as social constructs insofar as they reflect feelings of isolation, separateness, distinctiveness and otherness. Nowhere is this truer than in the case of the 'dry' island, an island that although once surrounded by water has long since lost its physical isolation due to changes in sea level and drainage patterns. Taking the Isle of Ely in the fens of East Anglia in the United Kingdom between AD 1200-1600 as a case study, and utilising archaeological evidence for diet and for the local Ely ware pottery, it is possible to reconstruct a cognitive mappa, which describes the perception of islandness amongst the island's medieval inhabitants. # c.44.2 # c.15.6 # ELY

2027. SMITH, D.M. The anatomy of a Fenland roddon: sedimentation and environmental change in a lowland Holocene tidal creek environment. From: Proc. Of the Yorkshire Geological Society, 2012. Summary: A Holocene sand/silt-filled tidal creek, locally called a roddon, excavated at Must Farm near Whittlesey preserves an unprecedented record of Fenland tidal creek evolution. The tidal creek was formed sometime between c. 4735BP and c. 3645BP. Its infill comprised centimetre-scale, laminated, tidal sand-mud couplets, numbering some 600 in total, with microfossils that show marine and coastal derivation of the sediment. The nature of the infill suggests rapid sedimentation that choked the creek system, perhaps in as little as a few years. At least three successive generations of roddons are present in the Fenland, suggesting at least three distinct episodes of tidal creek formation. The Must Farm roddon belongs to the first generation. A later, mud-filled channel was subsequently incised into the roddon, perhaps initiated by a marine surge. It quickly transformed into a slowly flowing river, as suggested by molluscs, ostracods and diatoms. Infill of this late-stage channel was slow, perhaps over about 1200 years between c. 3250 and 2050BP (c. 1300–100 cal BC), as shown by archaeological finds. The mud-filled channel superficially resembles late-stage, organic-rich channel infills visible on aerial photographs, but is wider and deeper and might have been part of a more substantial long-lived 'river', perhaps a tributary of the proto-Nene # RODDON

2057. SAYER, D. Medieval waterways and hydraulic economies: monasteries, towns and the East Anglian Fens. World Archaeology 41(1) pp132-247
Abstract: The wetlands of medieval Britain represented a valuable regional resource, and contributed to the success of some of the wealthiest monasteries in Britain. Drainage systems and transport mechanisms created an interdependent regional economic environment that needed administrative elites to manage and maintain its resources and ensure the continued survival of urban communities. This paper will compare recent excavations at Swavesey and Burwell and demonstrate that, while the letter of Wittfogel's classification of a 'hydraulic society' is not applicable to medieval England, aspects of it can be used to understand regional communities and wetland environments.

abstract: Samples were taken from 21 of the various timber elements of the mill, including both oak and elm timbers. Conventional ring-width dendrochronology established that the main post was most likely felled in the first half of the sixteenth century, making this the earliest main post of a post mill yet dated. Felling dates for the sheers and front sheer spacer of spring AD 1703 and spring AD 1707 also indicated a previously unknown rebuilding phase, which is earlier than the known partial- destruction of the mill during a storm in AD 1741. Other weak statistical matches between the ring-width series of oak and elm timbers were explored using other scientific dating techniques. The combined analysis confirmed that these other surviving timbers in the trestle probably date from repairs undertaken in AD 1874 and AD 1931 but suggested that many other timbers in the buck are eighteenth-century survivals.

Of fifteen graves, two were particularly well furnished, one of which was buried with a gold and silver necklace that included a cross pendant, as well as two complete glass palm cups and a composite comb, placed within a wooden padlocked casket. The paper reports on the skeletal and artefactual material (including isotopic analysis of the burials), and seeks to set the site in its wider social and historical context, arguing that this cemetery may well have been associated with the first monastery in Ely, founded by Etheldreda in AD 673

Note: The retention of 2.6 metric tonnes of building material from three rural masonry buildings from Bottisham, south-east Cambridgeshire, provided a rare opportunity for a thorough investigation into their fabric, form, construction style and function. A double-apsidal building may have been a bath-house and another building had evidence for an extensive box-flue tile heating system. Both buildings showed signs of either being unfinished or the heating element having never been used. A third building was a later construction that used rare red-slipped tegulae and imbrices. Prospects for fen meadow restoration on severely degraded fens.
From: Perspectives in Plant Ecology, Evolution and Systematics, vol.12, August 2010
The majority of fens in Europe have been transformed for agricultural purposes and have disappeared orbecome degraded. Fen meadows that developed under low-intensity management of fens also havebecome degraded. In this paper, we consider the available restoration methods, biotic constraints forrestoration and new prospects and approaches for the restoration of severely degraded fens. Due toirreversible changes in landscape settings, hydrology, soil and trophic conditions, a full restoration tonatural mires is unlikely. Yet, an improvement of the ecosystem functions and revival of biodiversity indegraded fens is possible. A restoration of semi-natural meadows is one of the alternative targets.Important for restoration efforts to succeed are a sufficient reduction of nutrient levels and preventingacidification. In general, a combination of topsoil removal and seed transfer is an effective measure forfen meadow restoration, provided that groundwater seepage can be re-established. There are alsoseveral biotic limitations to fen meadow restoration, due to limited propagule availability of targetspecies and the legacy of the former vegetation in form of its soil seed bank and high seed production byunwanted species. Under the present environmental conditions, the re-development of fen meadows ondegraded fens will result in species compositions different from those observed in the past and suchrestoration may require considerable time and effort

OUR TIME NEW SERIES
No.1 : CORONATION special, June 2006

CHYC.01.08 : VCH online

The Victoria History of the County of Cambridgeshire is the most authoritative history of the county published by the Institute of Historical Research of the University of London. Now most of the ten volumes which have been published can be read or downloaded online from http://www.british-history.ac.uk/search/series/vch--cambs

This is particularly important for the histories of all the parishes in the old county of Cambridgeshire and the Isle of Ely. These are spread over six of the volumes as summarised below.

A History of the County of Cambridge and the Isle of Ely: Volume 1
The introductory volume, has not been digitised

V.C.H. Cambridgeshire vol.2
A History of the County of Cambridge and the Isle of Ely: Volume 2
A part-volume, covering the history of the religious houses in the county, including the early history of Ely cathedral.

Includes Abbey and cathedral priory of Ely 199-210
4 Abbey of Thorney 210-217
5 Priory of St Radegund, Cambridge 218-219
6 Abbey of Chatteris 220-223
7 Priory of Ickleton 223-226
8 Priory of Swaffham Bulbeck 226-229
9 Priory of Anglesey 229-234
10 Priory of Barnwell 234-249
11 Priory of Spinney 249-254
12 Priory of St Edmund, Cambridge 254-256
13 Priory of Fordham 256-258
14 Priory of Marmont 258-259
15 Denney 259-262

48The Isle of Ely and the men of Lynn in the Civil War 1266

The civil war in the reign of Henry III reached the fen district, 1266. The King was engaged in besieging the Castle of Kenilworth with the whole of his forces; and the disinherited seized the opportunity of laying waste the land round Cambridge and Huntingdon. These men were rebels who had taken part against the King at Eversham and Kenilworth and whose estates had been confiscated. The Bishop of Peterborough in his "Likes of Simon de Montfort" in the Historical Biographies Series says: - "The Isle filled with class of men called the disinherited whose interest it was by continuing the war to obtain better terms for themselves; They came to the Isle of Ely on the 9th of August and scoured the district for provisions. The Bishop of Ely went to report the occurrence to the King, but he was received with disfavour, as it was believed that he actively sympathised with the rebels. The inhabitants of the counties in the fenland were charged to blockade the rebels and prevent their escape. But the disinherited drove them back as far as Norwich, and secured an immense booty from Norwich as well as from Cambridge. The citizens of Lynn thought this a good opportunity for the recovery of their liberties which the King had taken away from all the cities and towns which had opposed him. They accordingly proposed to him to purchase the restoration of their liberties by bringing the rebels who were in the Isle of Ely to him, alive or dead The King assented and the men of Lynn collected an immense number of common people, armed in various ways, Archers and slingers been especially named, and some ships. The disinherited, warned of the coming attack, fixed their standard on the dry land, so that the men of Lynn might know where they were. When these had disembarked, the rebels took down their standard, and feigned fight, as though not venturing to resist so great a multitude. The men of Lynn, and their forces fell victim to this. They pursued the pretended fugitives in a disorderly rush, with the inevitable consequence. The disinherited turned, surrounded and slew a great number, and made prisoner of many who attempted to get back to the ships. Of these some were put to death, others kept for ransom. Very many perished in the water; a few, "Not Without mockery," succeeded in getting to Lynn. The army of the disinherited maintained their position in the Isle of Ely until 1268. In that year the King HENRY III blockaded isle and his son made bridges of wicker-work and planks under instruction of inhabitants in most suitable places, and to him the disinherited led submitted themselves, some of them having succeeded in making the escape. The sixpence had offered favourable terms, and they were excepted on the 11th of July. The award of Kenilworth had previously moderated the grievances of the disinherited, and many had already availed themselves of its provision.

50record of FLOODS, WEST WALTON, - inundation by sea 1613 & 1671a framed board standing against wall near the vestry of the Church of St Mary demonstrates the inundation of Marshland by the sea in 1618 and 1671 and either a "fresh," - probably by the floods of rain which for some reason the dykes were unable to carry off, or by the overflow of the river in 1614. The inscription is in black letters on a white ground. It says "that on he first of November 1613 the sea broke in and overflowed all Marshland to the great danger of men's lives and loss of goods; 1 the three and 20th day of March; 1614 this country was overflowed with the fresh. And one the 12th and 13th of September 1671 all marshland was again overflowed by the violence of the sea

69The drowned fens - DUGDALE notes on drowned fens; " it has long been a received opinion, as well by the borderers on the fens as others, that the total drowning of this great level (whereof we have in our times been eye witnesses) have, for the most part, been occasioned by the neglect of putting the laws of sewers into due execution in these latter times; and that before the dissolution of the monasteries by King Henry VIII the passages for the water were kept with cleansing, and the banks with better repair, chiefly through the cost of those religious Houses . The first attempt to cleanse the outfalls was the Commission granted by Queen Elizabeth in the twentieth year of her reign to eleven gentlemen "for the draining of the fens, through and by the drain called Clowes crosse, and so to the sea. In 43 Elizabeth a statue was passed "for the recovering of many thousand acres of marshes and other grounds, subject commonly to surrounding, within the Isle of Ely and the counties of Cambridge, Huntingdon, Northampton, Lincoln, Norfolk" and four others, enacting at the owners of surrounded wastes and Commons might contract for part of such

Commons and wastes with any person you would undertake the draining. But under this Act little was done as it was passed so late in the Queen's reign. In 1605 letters were sent by the King to the commissioners of sewers of the district encouraging their proceedings, offering a part of his lands towards the charge of their recovery and appointing Henry Totnall and John Hunt to view the fens and to confer with the Commissioner. The work of draining was, after long debate, pronounced "feasible, and without any peril to any haven or county," and a particular examination of the whole level was made in June of the same year, and a report sent to the King, who sent letters instructing them "to fall in and speedily with the work, and the rather, because that was a dry summer, and so the more proper for it. On July 13 a certificate was sent of the total acreage of the fens, amounting to 307,242 acres. The work was very soon taken in hand, but it progressed slowly; and considerable opposition to the works was raised by "divers perverse spirited people" so that after describing the progress during the next six years, Dugdale laments how little was done, and that now there was a stop for five years at least. The opponents not only brought suits at law, " against the commissioners, but also made "libellous songs to discourage the work," of which he gives an example, "The Powte's complaint." The years 1617-1618 seem to have been occupied with meetings, petitions, orders, and reports, and in 1619 a treaty was made with Sir William Ayloff, Anthony Thomas and others as undertakers of the drainage project and the King signified his acceptance of the arrangements on September 4th 1619. In April 1620 the undertakers expressly agreed to drain the fens without any tax, and within three years, if the lands which they claimed as a competent recompense should be sufficiently assured to them, their heirs and assigns, for ever. They were to "open the outfalls of Nene and Welland, and make those rivers navigable as high as Wisbech and Spalding", and they were "not to forget to preserve the navigation" between Cambridge and Lynn. The lands they claimed, however, for some reason or other, could not be conceded. But in 1621 the adventurers were decreed 120,000 because, and the King declared "himself the principle undertaker." but this Royal interference did not help the work, and nothing whatever was done during the remainder of his reign. In 1629 a tax of six shillings an acre was made on all the "marishs, Fenny, waste, and the surrounded grounds," to secure a general draining, and a contract was made with Sir Cornelius Vermuyden to drain the level, and he demanded 95,000 acres in recompense. But the country disliked entrusting the work to an alien, and petitioned Francis, Earl of Bedford, to undertake the work himself, and this he agreed to do on the same terms. The agreement is given at length; the King however claiming 12,000 acres for his assent, to be laid out on lands belonging to the manor of Whittlesey, and 80,000 acres were assigned to the adventurers. What became of the 3,000 acres left nest, as the full amount of 95,000 acres is repeatedly mentioned, does not appear. All been settled, the Earl took in divers other adventurers, 13 number, to share with him the expense and the profit, he himself only retaining the three-twentieths of the whole undertaking. On March 13 1684, Letters patent of incorporation to these undertakers, with some others, were granted, "by the name of a governor, deputy governor, two bailiffs, and commonalty" of a body politic, to be guardians and conservers of the fens. The first members of the Society were these Francis, Earl of Bedford, Oliver Earl of Bullingbroke, Henry, Lord Maltrevers; Edward, Lord Gorges; Sir Francis Crane; Sir Miles Sandys; Sir Thomas Teringham; Sir Robert Lovell; Sir Filbert Vernat; William Sams; Oliver S.John; Anthony Hamond & Samuel Spalding # c.29

74storms in last century : The greatest storm of hail, attended with thunder and lightning, that has been known in the memory of man, lately fell at Littleport; some of the hailstones measured three inches about, and the ground was covered more than six inches deep on the level; the storm entirely destroyed a large field of hemp, except one corner, so that it has been ploughed and sowed again; the fruit trees appear as in the fall of the leaf, the ground being covered with leaves etc. Some of the stones that lay in a North aspect were measured the Thursday after and were then two inches and a half - June 1760

the most violent storm of thunder and lightning, and hail, happened in the Isle of Ely, by which eight farmers only, are said to have sustained damage in their crops to the amount of £3,000.Some of the hailstones measured six inches round, others fell in square pieces and killed crows, lapwings and other birds. In short no storm ever appeared so destructive and terrible in those parts - July 16 1769

In a dreadful storm at Haddenham Hillrow four mares were killed by the lightning - September 1774

This night and that the two following days, there blew the greatest storm of any that happened for some time past. On the night of the twentieth, it demolished the vane of the cathedral of Ely and all its appurtenances, with part of the stone work of the turret on which the vane was November 19 1776 - LITTLEPORT, HADDENHAM, ELY CATHEDRAL # c.12.6

158 opposition to DRAINAGE schemes incl Cambridge & poem each successive attempts at improving the drainage of the fens was met by opposition from some who believe that their vested interests would in some way suffer. Sometimes the residents thought their occupation would be gone; many had made a living out of the natural produce, which would grow no more as reeds and sedge; others from catching the wild fowl and fish, which would be driven away; others from cutting and stacking turf for fuel; and all these supposed they would be reduced to poverty when the fens were trained. The antagonism would be similar to what was seen among agricultural labourers when steam machinery was introduced, the feelings in many cases developing into riots and outrages, and even bloodshed. Opposition to Whittlesey mere. A worthy Alderman of Cambridge likened the fens to a crust of bread swimming in a dish of water, as under a depth of eight or 10 feet of earth the hall was nothing, he said but mere water. the draining thereof was therefore impossible. It was affirmed by his opponents that interest had betrayed his judgement into an evident error, and that his brain, rather than this floating earth, seemed to swim. The savans of Cambridge then urged that the Cam would have its stream dried up by the draining of the fens, and as Cambridge is concerned in its river, so the well being of the whole country, yea, of the whole kingdom, is concerned in Cambridge and its university, and the stream of knowledge would be dried up with the stream of Cam. It was, therefore, not unreasonable that driver men's particular profit, should be preferred for a universal good, - or the good of a university. Assurances were given that no damage should accrue to the river Cam; on the contrary, "to take away the thief is not wasting nor weakening the wick of the candle." Those who professed to be the poor man's friends bought forward other objections. They said that the fens were nurseries and seminaries of fish and fowl which would be destroyed by the draining; that the sedge, turf, and reed would likewise be destroyed, and that many thousand people then gained their livelihood by fishing and fowling in the fens, while the turf furnished fuel for the poor. The answers to these objections were forcibly though quaintly put. It was said that a large first course at any man's table, compensates for his shorter second course; and who would not prefer a tame sheep before a wild duck, and a good fat ox before a well grown eel; while the people employed might turn their industry to a more profitable account. The sedge etc would be replaced by good grass and grain. He cannot complain of wrong who has a suit of buckram taken from him and one of velvet given instead. Perhaps one of the most singular is the protest of Dean Duport in the seventeenth century. It takes the form of a set of verses in Latin published 1676 the poems will be seem to be full of humour. Possibly he meant the whole to be no more than a joke. He attributes all such schemes to avarice. Would the drainers have oats grow in the middle of the sea?. The poor dumb fishes cannot utter their complaints, so he will speak for them. Oxen have their pastures, sheep their rich meadows, worms even their earth and birds their air. Are fishes alone to be driven from their haunts. Let cattle keep the land, and leave the water to the fishes. It is after all no more than an attempt to wash an Ethiopian white. The siphons, and pumps, and pulleys, and wheels, and dams will all be employed in vain and some mighty flood will overturn all the contrivances, and engines, and the water will burst through the artificial embankments, and the scaly race of fishes regain their old abodes. It then gives the poem in Latin. Also refers to Dick of fens for opposition to drainage # c.73 c.29 # c.12.5

threw down their armes and ran away. "Gesta Stephani" says Ely is a pleasant island extensive and well peopled, with a fertile soil and rich pasture; it is surrounded on all sides by marshes and fens, and can be approached on one side only, where a strait and narrow road leads to the island and the castle, which from ancient times has stood above the waters at the very entrance in a singular manner; so that the whole island is one impregnable fortress" He then states that king came with large body of troops and constructed a bridge of boats over which he and his troops passed to the island. There were still some "slimy marshes to be passed but from private information he found a safe ford. "It is said a clever monk of Ely suggested the mode of crossing the water and was the guide who pointed out the way across the marsh ... later made Abbot of Ramsey". Royal troops took some of Bishop's soldiers prisoner but Nigel escaped; he was not formally deprived of his see & survived nearly half the reign of Henry II

1637?, :  report of Joseph Butler and Jasper Hetley messengers of the Chamber into the great level of the fens to apprehend persons found disturbing the works of draining; near Wicken they met Peter Jarvis constable; he persuaded them not to adventure into Wicken, the people being prepared to resist, and those of Soham, Barrack and Tottenham having agreed to help them. Ultimately the messengers with the constable and Minister of the Parish entered the town, the messengers being on horseback. The people came out with pitchforks and poles and gathered round a place where great heaps of stones were made. Amongst them John Moredack a principal rioter was charged to obey the councils warrant. When the messengers approached him, he pushed at them with his pike. The people prepared to assist him and the women got together to the heaps of stones to throw at the messengers, who were scoffed at, and abused by the whole multitude received message from the council requiring attendance at the board. You know the inability of my body I pray you make my excuse. I cannot conceive of any occasion but some suggestion from my cousin Isaac Barrow about the tumult in Wicken where he dwells, which he suffered unpunished, and would now make show as if he stood in fear of his life, and that none would obey his warrants. It is believed in these parts that he can rule them all with a word of his mouth. So his son in law Grimmer, Curate of Wicken, could do in his absence, as Mr Hetley, one of the King's messengers, after himself and two other messengers were by threats and force driven out of the town, told me. The question of speech about me the thus arises. One Barker, a labouring man dwelling near me in Haddenham came and told me of a great riot made at Wicken by hurling in my Lord of Bedford works, and withall told me of treasonable speeches used by one Howell of Bott Soham against his Majesty. I told Barker that I dwelt in the Isle of Ely and had not authority in the shire where these words were spoken and required seem to address themselves to Mr Barrow the next Justice

Word is bought that the country rose up against Bedford both in Coveney and Littleport by the example of Wicken men. I fear if present order be not taken it will turn out to be a general rebellion in all the fen towns

14MILITIA flogging at ELY 1809 c.45.3 riots
 In June 1809 the militia assembled in Ely for drill and training for the customary period of 28 days. Considerable dissatisfaction existed amongst men on account of having to pay for rucksacks and gaiters out of the guinea which was allowed to each man. On retiring from the field on the 19th, several men called out "no rucksacks," and declared they would not receive them.

The ringleaders were put under arrest, and troops were sent for from Ipswich, and shortly afterwards for squadrons of German cavalry arrives under the command of General Auckland who addressed the men, and said if they had any complaint to make he would try and redress it. Several men replied that they had no complaint to make, and that they had been well treated. The Earl of Hardwicke, Colonel of the regiment, also explained to them that each man would be entitled to a balance of eight shillings or nine shillings after paying for his kit.

A court martial was held, and five of the ringleaders were sentenced to receive 500 lashes each, but a part only of this punishment was inflicted. Public feeling was aroused, not only by the fact of the ringleaders of the mutiny having been flogged, but that soldiers of the German Legion should have been sent for to assist in quelling the disturbance. Four squadrons had come from Ipswich to Ely in a single day.

A correspondent at Bury sent to The Times a communication on the subject expressed in very strong language, and containing many statements afterwards shown to be wholly incorrect. It was suggested that all the ill-treatment that the militia men suffered made them so disgusted with military service that no recruits for the regular army could now be got from them. The German Legion, says the writer, had been sent to quell an insurrection of the local militia quartered at Ely, who had put all their officers under arrest, but who had otherwise been peaceable. The cause of the insurrection was said to the this - that the militia, who had come from some distance, and several of them penniless, had received no pay for some days, during which some of them were half starved.

A reply to this was sent by Colonel Mackenburg in a letter from Ely. So far from the disturbance having originated in the men being deprived of their pay and half-starved, on the contrary, every man in the regiment was regularly served with three quarters of a pound of good beef, three pound of good bread, and sixpence in money four days; that so far from the officers being arrested by the men in the course of a few hours after the mutiny had broken out, 26 of the ringleaders were secured by the officers, and long before the German Legion, which at the commitment I had sent for.

The real origin is attributed only to a few indisposed persons residing in the town, and a few worthless rascals belonging to the regiment, who had deceived the men respecting the necessities to be paid for by every man in the corps out of an allowance of one guinea given by the government for that purpose, and part of which, viz rucksack and gaiters, succeeded in persuading the men should have been furnished by their colonel as part of the clothing. The men are now convinced of their error, and on Thursday five of the principal investigators of the mutiny were publicly flogged. I beg leave to add that the men were yesterday sent to their homes perfectly quiet and contented, and many of them with 15 shillings in their pockets.

The official account given in The Courier, the newspaper in the interest of the government, was as follows: the mutiny amongst the local militia which broke out at Ely was fortunately suppressed by the arrival of four squadrons of the German Legion cavalry from Bury. Five of the ringleaders were tried by court martial and sentenced to receive 500 lashes each, part of which punishment they received on Wednesday and part was remitted. A stoppage for their knapsacks was the ground of complaint that excited this mutinous spirit, which occasioned the men to surround their officers and demand what they deemed their arrears. The First Division of the German region halted at Newmarket on their return to Bury.

The idea of Englishman being flogged by Germans excited the indignation of William Cobbett, the notorious political writer of the period to make it the subject of a violent article in The Political Register in which he denounced the government who had in the previous year introduced a Bill for establishing local militia of 200,000 men to be trained for 28 days in every year. This article produced a great sensation and the government prosecuted Cobbett for libel. The trial came on 14 June 1810 Cobbett was found guilty and sentenced to pay a fine of £1,000, to be imprisoned for two years, and to give sureties to keep the peace for seven years. Mr Hansard, the printer was imprisoned for three months, the publishers were imprisoned for 2 months.

Twenty years later Cobbettt visited Ely and went to see the spot where the punishment had been inflicted. He had an interview with one of the men who was still living and left with the impression that he was a very steady, respectable, farm form. He published a description of this visit of a very sensational character containing of the extravagance and uncharacteristic dealings of the government, but in standard language, such as not be made the occasion of a Neither prosecution. He also took the opportunity of abusing the bishop and clergy

May 1653 William Baker deposes while his servant was ploughing at Soham some of the townsmen took six of the horses and impounded them whereupon he was forced to get some soldiers to fetch them out and was much hindered. The townspeople also said that the adventurers had nothing to do with the ground and that it was not adjudged to them, and thereupon cut a Dyke between his and Lord Chief Justice St John's ground so as to make a way to carry the horses out of the ground

1653 Aug 30 Richard Georges & 9 others to Richard Henley. Several riots and assaults on the workmen; John Drew of Little Swaffham one of them fined £20 and committed to jail but subsequently the said justices mitigated the fines to a small sum and they were then paid by the town and the rioters released. A month afterwards we found that our works had been thrown in again by a great number of people, and they had given it out in public that the towns of Burwell and Reach and the two Swaffhams and Bottisham were resolved to rise and threw in our dikes; we applied to Roger Rant the justice at Swaffham and endeavoured to show to him the danger of a breach of the peace and the inconvenience is of such unlawful assemblies; but we found him very cold and dilatory and not willing to take notice of the declaration of 29th June last. He had seen it but was to proceed on the known laws. Seeing little hope of redress there we applied to major Tyson who commanded the regiment here in Colonel Humphrey’s absence and upon being acquainted with the decisions as to the combination against us and the intention of throwing in our works he afforded us a guard of three or four of his men to be kept nightly on our works at Swaffham. On Saturday night 27th, 80 persons came down armed with muskets, short pikes and swords, and discharged on the Guard, wounding one of them very dangerously, and chased away and beat the rest, and forced them to help throw in our dykes, giving out very high and insolence speeches. We do not know the names of the parties but are confident that it was done by the meaner sort of Burwell Swaffham Reach and Bottisham and that they are set on and abetted by the better sort of the said towns. This being a business of consequence to the public peace we represented to you in London that speedy application maybe made to those in authority and able to suppress these tumults all other means having hitherto proved fruitless by reason of the contrary interest and disaffection of the Civil magistrates in these parts
There is likewise information of an attempt lately made to break the doors of the double sasse at Salters Lode which were quite sufficient to overthrow the whole draining of the south side; and generally on this side the people begin to be very high and riotous. They all talk of Sir John Maynard’s petition being received and that the whole matter is to be re-examined and they hope revoked and made null.

in the night assaulted and beat a party of Colonel Humphrey's troop who did us the favour to keep a guard over our works to defend them by being thrown over by the country as they had many times been formerly. We have received many affronts from this corner of the country and applications have been made to the civil and military officers for suppressing them; but the first wanted will and affection to do us any good and the other power and orders from their superiors. Indeed there is no accommodation in the country for quartering soldiers unless they might be in private houses which they did awhile, but the officers got them removed that they might better play their pranks. In my opinion we have such an advantage over them at this time by this rash action of theirs that if it be well followed we may for ever quiet them. Nothing would fright and quiet them more than if there were 100of these desperate fellows pressed for the service whose; they being all Waterman and having little to do at home make these night excursions to show their valour against my Lord generals men which would be much better employed against the Dutch. It was a great oversight to let Sir John Maynard gain longer time about the hearing of his petition fore we feel the effects here of that delay, the people growing troublesome and continue against us and raise money to bare the charge and are framing very high and clamorous petitions against us. Meanwhile I doubt Sir John's party here will take advantage of any trouble or misfortune that may happen to the state to rise and destroy our works as they did in Lincolnshire.

1649 petition of poor inhabitants of Sutton to the supreme power of the nation. About 4000 acres of common fens and marshes which formerly belonged to the poor of the Parish were in the year 1624 unjustly taken away and enclosed and some of the best part given by some rich men of the Parish, too whom it did not belong, to the Dean and Chapter of Ely, for obtaining their end in defrauding the poor of the rest. In 1645 petitioners applied to the House of Commons for redress of their grievances and for so doing seven of them were committed to the jail of Ely by Sir Miles Sandys, who by force kept them from going forth to assist the parliament against the late King. Petitioners pray that the poor of the Parish may enjoy the Commons and other benefits belonging to them, that the land unjustly given to the Dean of Ely may be restored to those to whom it belongs, that the poor may receive satisfaction from those that have wronged them and that they may be set to work in as in other countries so that they may not all perish of famine in the time of plenty 26VERMUYDEN'S discourse on draining, 1642... "rivers lye common with the lands ...(no banks) ... and for this reason and for want of a sufficient passage for the water ... all the lands are overflown ... the level is broad and of great extent and flat with no descent of its own and grown full of hassacks, sedge and reed, and the rivers full of weeds; and the waters go slowly away from the lands ad out of the rivers and they come swift into it ... out of the Upland counties where the rivers have a great fall ... tides bring in sands ... and there is but a few times sufficient land-water to keep the out-fall open. Soil is moorish, gathered and grown up higher by the weeds and oaze of the waters; many of them are rich grounds and all would (if well drained) be very profitable and become good grounds

... a general rule of drayninng ... by imbanking all the rivers on each side ... but I cannot advise to go in such a way ... for then a multitude of banks must be made ... the yearly reparation very great. The head draynes ... must be carried through a higher ground than the lands drayned which will be the greater charge and those grounds must be dear bought ...
A great inconvenience on the south side of the Ouse by imbanking rivers ... there would be three or four levels and to lead away downfall must be carried by tunnels underneath the ... rivers of Mildenhall, Brandon and Stoke ... and go 28 miles before it cometh to the fall ... in a slow pace. And how such a downfall should be brought such a length without surcharging the draines I know not ... and especially several brooks which will overtake the downfall ... the level would become surrounded. And by the waters without the banks which lye in continual danger of inundation for want of a good fall in the winter, and by a wind, catch, break and undoe all again
And although each mouth of the several rives of Mildenhall and Brandon be brought through new channels to Stoke and so by Stoke mouth into the Ouse ... the downfall have no issue neither ... and the lands much subjected to drowning both by river and downfall ... cont on eve & p81 RIVER OUSE

167 drainage of Gt Level - POPAMS EAU – 1570 under top work which resulted in a level which in former times had flown with part of the Nen to Crowland to Spalding, at the end of the sixteenth century brought water into the Isle of Ely. This aggravated the condition of the fenland, who contained in 1590 that "We live in sharp penury and the laboured and poor old folks and children go on begging and many have died this year for want of food". It is singular that when the whole fen was drowned the inhabitants about the outfalls clamoured for more waters. When the first undertakers presented their project their Cambridge dons saw that the days of the Cam were numbered; the farmers were in despair. The whole Isle petitioned in 1590 and then Nene outfall was not undertaken until 1631. Petition complains that the area has been flooded and people die and starve and hope the Queen may take some speedy and effectual course for draining this so great and miserable a country. Several fen bills were brought into parliament early in the reign of James I. The drowned state of Well Moor attracted the attention of Sir John Popham who undertook to cut a drain from Well stream across the moor to Powdike. This is the work which is called Popham's Eau. When the death of Sir John in 1607 stopped the work a Bill was promoted by some undertakers for the purpose of competing the Eau. The Eau was seven miles long. Mr Bell through whose land the Eau was cut induced the commissioners of sewers to view it and to order the doors of the upper sluice to be shut. No compensation had been given to the landowners and commoners whose land had been taken and it seemed hard to then to give part of their land to form a work which drowned the country.
Sir John Popham Chief Justice of the King's Bench from 1603-1607 was notorious for cruel sentences and the condemnation of witches. He justified the execution of two young women at Cambridge because he was afraid that Christian faith would end if the belief in witchcraft did! A petition of the King refers to the covetous bluddle Popham offering to lend £10,000 towards the draining of the fens thereby to take many men comings from them for his own profit ; if Your Majesty should borrow but one hundred he would cry. He is cursed of all the poor of that part of England and they swear they will kill him or such as shall be involved therein.Petitions from Isle 1609; at session of sewers Ely with Sir James Peyton, Miles Sandys etc. whereas there are many low and Fanny grounds which for the most part overflown by the flesh waters for want of maintaining and repairing the ancient drains falling out of the said countries into the sea, divers of which drains have been of long time defective and are now wholly lost and grown up to the great loss and hurt of the said countryside whereas diverse honourable persons for the common good have attempted to recover the fens and low grounds amongst which Sir John Popham late Lord Chief Justice of England to his great costs and charges began an excellent piece of work in making a new Lode or river from March to Well and so extending into the river of Welney and from thence to other common and soulful fens in Upwell to a place called Nordelph and there falleth into Well Creek and by that river into the Ouse, but the said Popham being prevented by death it was left unfinished. Whereupon the commissioners consider the profit the countrys shall receive by the perfecting of the said river decree that it be cleaned scowered and perfected by taking up all the dams and other stops and hindrances with all convenient speed. And likewise ordain the river be dyked,... and ordain that there shall be hanged by chain of Iron Cross so that boats may not pass through the said bridge.

This entailed heavy taxation and Wisbech sought to exempt themselves from their charge as it would silt up their outfall. March fen was a swamp, Doddington men meant to fight against further taxation and Londoners had come to gather wool and did not intend to be fleeced. There were petitions against it. The Bill for the completion of Popham's Eau did not become law
The charges of King James' household were a trouble to him. He had a great aversion to the Commons, who clogged their Supply Bills with conditions which seemed to the King an invasion of his prerogative. The towns of Doddington, Chatteris and Whittlesey were much aggrieved. Cambridge and the towns within the privilege of the University were exempt from this contribution so it fell heavier on the fens. The speaker, Sir Edward Phillips, a resident in the Isle, humbly proposed to the King that he would be pleased to release his right to purveyance and accept a share in the project for recovering and issuing land in the Isle which was likely to be a perpetual standing revenue. In a letter to the King he says there are diverse gentlemen who in an attempt to remove cause of discontent as to the abuse of affairs have entered into consideration a project to produce a perpetual revenue towards the charge of your house out of the lands to be recovered in the Isle of Ely. There is a bill in the house touching the draining of those towns wherein the undertakers are to have for their charge 112000 acres which in time it is thought may be worth £50,000a year. The desire of these gentlemen is that this benefit may accrue unto your Majesty in consideration of discharging the crown of this burden of affairs and they offer to employ the best endeavours. In consideration at the King releases his rights and claims of purveyance

But King James was not in a position to give anything. Many projects were submitted whereby the Royal revenue might be increased by £ 15000. The fens were the El Dorado of the age. The madder licences were to recoup their outlay on the drainage works, and a loan by the City would be easily raise the so eager were Alderman to invest their funds in Well moor, where centuries before King John's forces had been swallowed. Madder was a root yielding a red dye. It is a three year crop planted like asparagus. The matter mill was at Leverington # c.29`

197* drainage of the Gt Level - Commissioners of sewers 1609 propose new cut at HARRYMERE, THETFORD on OUSE, prompted by long experience as by sundry complaints and increased to see the yearly loss and desolation of the country; and proposed straighten channel from Ely Hards to LITTLEPORT. There was a good deal of debate about the power of the commissioners to tax the country for new works, and to cut off corners and make the crooked rivers straight. The Crown lawyers gave their opinion in favour of the sewers but no such new works were to be made without the consent of owners and tenants of three forth parts in value of their lands to be changed. They thought they had power and at a session of sewers at Ely 1608 resolved to execute the necessary works to convey away the waters which caused the inundation of the most fruitful grounds in the upper part of the Isle of Ely. They decreed an established the removal of impediments near Harrymere, new trenches and sewers to be made with as much speed as possible. Also where as there is an elbow parcel of Barway fen near area there shall be one trench cut line straight by and through the said elbow from river to river and that all the matter coming from the trench be cast and laid on the fen side. And a like trench to be made to another elbow in the fen called Barway middle. And a trench newly cast from the Ouse from Barway extending to Stuntney bridge and from there unto the Ouse through Ely fens as near line straight as conveniently may be in such sort and the same may fall again into the Ouse at or beneath Littleport chair.

The whole scheme was to cost about £1,200. Nicholas Massey was surveyor of the works and he soon had 200 men cutting through Harrymere elbow and making a sluice. But one Saturday night in August he was £10 short and the bankers had to go home with promises. He notified the commissioners that he had promised full payment on Monday and entreated them to disperse £10 for saving his credit and relieving the poor men but the commissioners were in difficulty. They had already advanced money out of their own pockets and found that the sheriff refused to enforce the tax they had imposed on the country without their guaranteed to secure him against the multiplicity of suits with which he was assailed. They had to stop the works or comply. This they did and Crown lawyers gave an opinion in support of the power of the commissioners to tax for new works. They resorted to the Privvy council as usual to get them out of the difficulty. Harrymere elbow is shown on Saxton's map in 1560 must have been a common nuisance. Atkins in his report of 1618 says "from Ely the Ouse passes to Littleport in a crooked course making a tract of ten miles long by water where as by land it is but 3. About eight years since to remedy this the Commissioner of sewers proposed to cut a straight river from Ely hards to Littleport chair a course of two miles. About £1000 was bestowed on it but being a new work and not approved of by the better sort of Ely there was means made to stay it. The money was well spent on new cuts and the outlay on the sluice was small as a Bill of the work shows

The rendezvous of the commissioners was at Ely - Payton, Sandys etc were in attendance at the hotel and their bills testified they drank claret at breakfast, at the ordinary, and at dinner too, with plenty of sugar – which was very expensive commodity # c.29

235 drainage of the Gt Level - 1618 work on outfalls, survey Nene, Ouse & West Water; recite route of Ouse through Germans to Lynn, which is the wrong course for the greatest part of Ouse water for level the chiefest part of such water in ancient times was carried to the sea from Earith bridge by a stream called West Water to Chatteris ferry and so to Benwick and so in that stream to Guyhirn and so by Wisbech river to the sea, a far nearer way than now it does, which such stream called West Water is now so decayed and grown up with wreck from Earith bridge downwards towards Benwick that small or no part of those waters run that way but in the wrong course by Stretham aforesaid to the great HAVE hurt of the towns of the Isle of Ely by overwhelming them with more water than they ought to bare and surrounding their grounds; and worse hurt will ensue if the waters of the Ouse be not put into their former ancient course and therefore we think it convenient that the stream called West Water before October 1614 be dyked, scoured and made perfect according to the ancient width and depth by such persons who ought to do the same and that there be then also set and placed two piers or jetties for the turning of as much as the water as may be into the West Water, which jetties are to be done at the charge of the High Country above Earith which have their waters that way.

But when the commissioners made decreed for widening and scouring West Water the inhabitants of Marshland and parts adjoining the Ouse petitioned the Lords of the Council for the straightening of Lynn Haven, to get rid of the many fresh waters unduly thether descending in default of their proper outfalls. Currents at the outfalls were wanted hence to narrow and deepen the Ouse at Lynn seemed better than the restoration of West Water which began to flow the wrong way in the fourteenth century. The inhabitants of Marshland and the commissioners were not pulling together and the quarrel about the duplicate Commission damped the hopes of the fen and gave an opportunity to the first "undertakers" to supplant the commissioners with a general scheme for the drainage of the great level

The commissioners, nominated from Ely and the district near the Cam river considering that the interests of their part of the fenland were made subservient to the interests of the level, obtained from the privy council a duplicate Commission enabling them to hold a separate sessions at Cambridge. The recital of the laws of sewers made at a general session at Huntingdon 1618 points clearly to the distractions and differences amongst the Commission's thus:

The great and vast waters of the rivers Ouse, Nene Wayland and Grant often overflowing the banks of their defective channels as it were conspiring the surrounding of the large and fruitful fens and the adjacent Counties. And certain self-concerted wilful and overwhelming persons out of their own singularity and perverse disposition no less dangerously threatening the imminent ruins of those parties by spurning , against the authority and proceedings of those by whose Providence, care, industry and diligence such outrages were want to be prevented and unlawfully practising under pretext of law to question and discourage the commissioners whereby the said countries were in great distress and the people much distracted and perplexed upon whose petitions it pleases the King's Majesty to command the Lords and others of his privy council to take consideration of the premises. only present order for of such stubborn and averse persons as had formerly opposed the power and authority of the commissioners of sewers but gave encouragement to the commissioners in their wonted courses for suppressing the violence and preventing the danger of the said overflowing waters and further promised their patronage unto them and publicly read in a great assembly as seldom been seen together at a session of sewers at Wisbech June 1618 all the hearers did with unspeakable joy and gladness apprehend with thankfulness his Majesty's respected of those distressed countries and their Lordships care in the premises. The commissioners gave warrant for the general returns to be made of jurors for every of five counties selecting 12 of best and discharged take views diligently to inquire all the defaults of the rivers and sewers. And after such views they gave their verdict for the Laws of sewers

The rival Commissioners began the contest for authority by countermanding one another's warrants. The new Commissioners aimed at the custody of the fen records and summoned a general session of sewers to be held at Cambridge Castle with intent to trap the old Commissioners and make them surrender the records. The old Commissioners held a session at Stilton, when the fen droves were under water, so that the Cambridge men could not be present and vote At Stilton on 20 January 1618 an order was made that Nicholas Massey Clerk shall not at any time deliver any records unto any person under penalty but he may make copies of anything and deliver them to such as shall have use thereof at a charge

The old Commission protested to the privy council and "were much comforted by their Lordships order to proceed in the general business of the country. Their account of the intended sessions at Cambridge Castle is as follows: it is to be held the day after quarter sessions so that none of the commissioners of other counties being justices of the peace can be there unless they neglect the other service; they directed the clerk of the sewers commanding him to bring all such matters decrees except such laws as only concern the outfalls of Nene and Welland meaning thereby to get all our records into their hands and so Fenland Notes and Queries vol.5 1903

We thank your Honours for your care of us but we can assure ourselves of no quietness to continue unless your Lordships may be moved to call in the duplicate of the Commission lately sent out for Cambridgeshire in regard that our clerk of sewers dwells within the said County who has always the Commission itself in his custody.

Miles Sandys was a member of the old Commission and seemed to have opposed the Cambridge men

The operation of the duplicate Commission was restricted by order of the council to the County of Norfolk. It was clear that Cambridgeshire men were not at one, but the university, alarmed about proposed new works likely to affect the navigation to Cambridge, joined with the commissioners thereabouts and notified the Council "that the petition exhibited was not only without their assent and knowledge of any of the commissioners inhabiting the counties of Cambridge and Isle of Ely but contrary to the desires both of us and the country wherein we live, for since the coming down of the said new Commission and your Lordships order for the restraint of the duplicate there is a general session summoned for all the counties at Stilton, in a town in their remotest part of Huntingdonshire which is an innovation not formally known to have a session summoned in the winter season, the whole level of the surrounded grounds subject to the authority of the commissioners lying usually, as it now doth, deep under water so as neither the sewers nor the defects thereof can de discerned, neither can the commissioners, the ordinary passages being all drowned, travel out of their own limits without great inconvenience and hazard

In response to this application the council sent a hearty commendation to the general session and required the respite of any laws made at Stilton touching Cambridge and the Isle and the stay of any new cuts and works on the rivers Grant and Ouse which cannot be made without hindrance of the navigation to the town of Cambridge. The Vice Chancellor and the mayor began to take an active part in the work of the commissioners of sewers, whose new works in the channel of the Ouse threatened the suppliers of the University and the trade of the town. But it could not be denied that new works were necessary. The old drains of the Isle were cut when the drainage flowed by West Water to Wisbech and in 1618 the only way to get rid of the water was by the Ouse to the Nene outfalls. The river was blocked with weirs and Hards, eight of the latter between Overcote and Harrymere. Sir Clement thought Sutton Lode from West Water to Littleport ought to be opened, but the order for that purpose was stayed by a letter from the privy council. The difference about opening certain Lode was referred to Earl of Arundel to view and record. This finding the dispute about taxation for the new work was the chief obstacle made a report to the council and submitted a proposal for an undertaking of their own for draining the great level. They had "resolved at their own and their friends charges without raising any taxes to venture the enterprising of many thousand acres of the fens or surrounded grounds to make them dry and to be good and profitable meadow and pasture and so to continue”. 1619 they submitted proposals and outlined recompense required; they hoped to complete draining thin three years. This was the first proposal for drainage by a contract between the Lords and Commoners in the fens with “Undertakers” pursuant to the General Drainage Act 1601

The preamble of the act for making dry and profitable surrounded rounds proceeds to enact that the lords of the manors and majority of the owners interested may contract or bargain with such persons which would undertake draining and keeping dry permanently the several wastes. Crown interests were not to be bound without Royal consent. King was persuaded that the undertakers were to replenish his meagre Exchequer. His Majesty wrote to the commissioners of sewers "we recommend them and their design to your special care to further them with your authority and if any be refactory you correct and chastise their obstinately according to justice”. At a session of sewers held at Peterborough September 1618 the undertakers presented themselves "with their large promises which gave cause to fools to wonder at them but to wise men and of experience to smile at them and suspect their attempts". Their want of knowledge about the difficulties involved astonished the commissioners. They were invited to reduce their proposals to writing and in so doing made mention of "fresh and salt fens" . The court smiled and asked if they meant salt marshes. "if by our industry those grounds are bettered we expect to have a sufficient consideration for the same" they replied; but salt marshes are drowned every day by the ebbing and flowing of the sea, and there could be no such thing as a salt fen - perhaps they meant salt grounds surrounded at low water mark - and they were likely to have accepted this amendment had not one indicated that they had better be careful about undertaking to recover the bottom of the sea.

Please make what use of this you may. Kindly remember where it came from – www.mikepetty13a@gmail.com

In the end the commissioners gave their consent for the undertakers to proceed with their works, but before so doing they should give security that they would in no way impair the navigation of the rivers, and they reported to the council there was opposition and we desire we may understand the agreement with the gentlemen and others of the Isle by and through which parties we must pass our waters before we entertain any further conference with the undertakers. Signed including Sandys.

The commissioners took a sound view of the authority conferred on them by the Commission of sewers. It restricted their powers to charge landowners towards a general work in respect of the benefits which they might derive therefrom and they were not invested with power to grant any man's holding to undertakers. The King was then at Newmarket so Sir Anthony Thomas, one of the undertakers, rode over to inform him of the opposition to the project who referred the business to the privy council so that the whole matter might be thoroughly debated and the enterprise being so worthy His Majesty would vouchsafe to honour the consultation with his own presence - WEST WATER, CAM & vice chancellor

Charles I was inclined to leave the reclamation of the fens to his subjects; many proposals were made. That of Messrs Tipper and Gason was recommended in 1626 by the commissioners of sewers as convenient for his Majesty's Service. they prayed for a general plant to confer on them the privilege to drain all fresh and salt marshes and low grounds throughout England and Wales. They had discovered a new mode of draining by means of sluices and locks and undertook to drain 20,000 acres of land high and dry every year. This plan was worked on the Ouse at Hemingford and Houghton, in conjunction with corn mills. Gason obtained the first patent for lock drainage in 1618. In 1628 Gason’s patent was confirmed; he to take toll threepence a tonne at sluices and locks between St Neots and St Ives and in 1638 he had a grant of the sole right of carriage of corn and coal to within four miles of Bedford. Their recompense was to be one fourth part of fresh Marshland reclaimed and three fourth parts of salt marshes, tithe free for seven years. The drainage of the great level was not appreciably affected by these works which were more suitable for navigation purposes than for land drainage which requires to be supported during an unproductive period by the resources of the wealthy. Sir Anthony Thomas and diverse wealthy men associated with him proposed to take up the projects of the first undertakers. To this end the King send his Royal letters to the Commissioner of sewers recommending Sir Anthony " whereas diverse our noble Kings and Queens have endeavoured by all ways and means to accomplishment draining of the fens. And last our Royal father undertook the same but for want of affecting a general bargain with the country this worthy desire have been foreslowed. Now know the that we tendering highly the welfare of our subjects who are owners of any fen lands or grounds annoyed with fresh or salt water recommend to the Commissioner of sewers a trusty servants in this worthy design of draining the fens. And we require you to appoint a general session of sewers at which meeting we desire you to agree with the undertaker to settle such or the like rate or tax on every acre of land as formerly has been at which place you will receive fair compositions as to the undertakers to drain the drowned land within the space of six years”..

These undertakers meant to make the fenmen find their funds to fight the invading floods, they meant to live on the enemy. This would not do for the commissioners who stated their views to the King and left Sir Anthony to go over Welland and try his fortune elsewhere

"to the King we Commissioners did take serious consideration of the general detriment which your Majesty does suffer by their almost continual deluge of many thousand acres of land and the decay of the navigation of the ports of Wisbech and Spalding and met in the hope of a good issue of the endeavours Sir Anthony Thomas and have had diverse public conferences with them and when we desired he would aquaint us the particular project of his intended works he utterly refused to do so unless we should first set a tax of 10 shillings on every acre which we held unpalatable a burden. In which respects we had no legal power to contract with them besides we were at the same time offered to have the work performed for £35,000 by men whose judgements are greatly approved by us”

Francis,  Earl of Bedford, now comes on to the scene with a useful scheme and funds to make it effectual. In 1638 Sir Cornelius Vermuyden made a proposal to the commissioners of sewers for the drainage of the great level. "upon a map or card he described the said fenny marsh, waste and surrounded grounds and the outfalls thereof by lines and other descriptions and also by writing expressed and set down what drains, sasses, sluices, banks, cuts and other works he intended " but his financial resources were conjectural and the “country” objected to leave an undertaking of national importance to an alien, so the Earl of Bedford surplanted the Dutchman in the character of undertaker, retaining his services as engineer and adhering to his plans. By the contract of 1638 which is known as Lynn Law the Earl became sole undertaker at his own charge to drain the level in such manner as that it shall be fit for meadow or pasture, or arable, and by God's blessing he will fully finish the drainage within the compass of six years.

To accomplish the undertaking the Earl contracted with 13 persons to join him in the adventure. By this deed, known as the indenture of 14 parts dated 20 Feb 1631 the recompense was divided into 20 whole shares, each of four thousand acres, which, with 3000 acres left to meet contingencies and 12,000 surrendered to the King as a voluntary and free will offering, dispose of the 95,000 acres. The Royal share was subsequently diminished by 2,000 acres which were granted to Richard Western thus reducing the King's part to 10000 acres. The 80,000 acres and the King's share also were subject to taxation which might be imposed by the commissioners of sewers at the instance of the Conservators, who could not tax on their own authority, nor could the Commissioner of sewers impose the tax on lands other than those reclaimed and reserved, persuant to the indenture of 14 parts and the St Ives law. The Earl and co-adventurers were incorporated by Royal Charter as the Governor's Bailiffs and commonalty of the Society of the Conservatives of the fens - list of names they were soon at work about the Nene outfalls and mating ways or roads to enable them to get about the fens. Hard highways were wanted instead of summer tracks, but fenland Road are necessarily in the form of causeways, which are ever subsiding by compression of the porous sub soil. The excavation of hard and impervious materials and conveyance, which had cost large sums for roads which sank and banks which slipped into their drains, was useless, till some constant condition of the internal drainage could be attempted by regulating outfalls. To accomplish this the resumption of full works at the Horse shoe sluice was determined . Specifications. The Horse shoes formed a new highway from Cambridgeshire to Norfolk. In 1644 the parliaments committee at Cambridge directed the governor of Lynn to secure Horse shoe pass for the security of Wisbech. Before that the passage was by Walton dam, described in 1635 as a passage having been formerly a river now dammed up being but a little Creek and parts Norfolk and Lincolnshire

the Earl and the Conservators set about cutting the new river from the Horseshoe to the outfalls, to supersede the tortuous course of the old Nene which forms the boundary between Norfolk and Cambridge

The new cut at the outfalls had been made in the sixteenth century but in 1621 a jury presented that it was very defective and the old river at the new cut mouth stilted so that no water passes that way and all houses which had been erected on the old embankments so encroached on the narrow channel of the river that the Earl in 1636 had to purchase several and demolish them in order to clear the outfall

The plan of the new river indicates that the Earls works were nearly complete. Delays were attributed to the heavy cost of material of embankment. It is certain that many of the participants failed to contribute their share of the expenses incurred. This occasioned the complaints of the country and riots by the poor commoners, but the general disturbance, caused by political differences as much as anything, arrested this undertaking which was finished after 1650 when the company entered into an agreement with Sir Cornelius Vermuyden. In £1649 Mr Dodson offers to engage £1000 to make a river from the outfalls at the Horseshoe to Murrow gate 50 feet wide with banks sufficient to save the country and to repair the same were for seven years. The expenses are given including one hundred wheelbarrows at 3s/4d each

The conservators made themselves merry over losses. They built Piccadilly Hall on the North Bank of the new river to match White Hall which lay on the other side of the Nene. There was plenty of claret and sugar. The Place was laid out like its namesake in London “a fair House of entertainment and gaming with handsome gravel walks and an upper and lower bowling green wither very many of the nobility and gentry of the best quality resorted both for exercise and conversation". This home of toads and reptiles was changed to gardens and quaint mazes, the oozy marsh to odorous woodland, pools to cascades, swamps to bowling Greens and pleasant pastures. Loud from the hall came the sound of revelling: “Now we're for the parliament and now we're for the King”. Alas the hall of it no memory remains; the quaint mazes have lost themselves and their bowling Greens are swallowed up in mud

The destruction of a bowling green in Wisbech is noted in 1571: on the 6 October chanced a terrible tempest of wind and rain by land and sea. The sea broke in between Wisbech and Walsoken  and at the Cross Keys drowning eight houses and Jarmans and Stowe bridge. At the Cross keys in the walls of the house were broken down. In the Bishopric of Ely Wisbech, Guyhirn, Parson Drove and Hobshouse were overthrown. In Wisbech was a garden, a tennis play and a bowling alley all about with grit was quite destroyed by the water.

Funds were wanted to retrieve their position and to relieve the condition of the surrounded rounds. The commoners seeing their lands were the worse for the drainage works, meant to have their Commons again. Riots occurred at Holme, Ely, Wareham. Strong team of campers, a hundred a side, swept banks and fences away. They must eat. The Conservators had deceived the country - there cows were starving and the wildfowl were scared way. For the fowler and the Fisher there was nothing to catch. Hence a petition to Earl of Bedford from the inhabitants of Wereham Stoke. Commoners in their fens found five people digging in the fen without directions at an inconvenient place where we lay our shot fowls as would be the utter undoing of the said townships if they had gone on and consisting of 735 souls which exist merely of fens and have weekly sent three horse load of fowls worth unto us £100 per annum towards the maintenance of the inhabitants which by this digging they should be deprived of whereupon the diggers being demanded who set them on work they said a gent but who he was they knew not nor by what authority they so did. It was only then requested that they would forebear whereupon having taken up their tools they peaceably departed. We are commanded to attend the council to answer the same.

Dr Sammes attributed that discontent to witchery he wrote to the council: after getting the delinquents together we found them so miserable, poor and base that they were not meet to be presented before the Lords; therefore on the examination of them we have committed one who was the first mover of this mutiny to the prison at Wisbech, who is by her neighbour's esteem a witch, to which opinion the messengers adhere for they taking boat near her house were bitterly accursed by her and soon after a strong man, the watermen, was stricken with such a lamentable crick in his back that he was constrained to get help. The most part of these rebels live on the arms of the parish therefore we thought fit that some exemplary punishment should be inflicted on them.
In 1636 the reasons of the fenland against draining and the answers of adventurers had been put into writing against : that in every common fen town the greater part of the inhabitants having neither lands of their own nor in farm and living only by the fens in no way else able to put bread into their mouths must with the whole charge of children either live on arms, beg or starve
For : if the lives of them that live only on fish fowl, Reid, flag and turf be observed it will be found that for one half and more of the year they live nearly idle and have no means to set them on work which is the cause of their misery; and where they speed well one day in fishing or fowling they often miss in half a dozen together. But for the matter of fishing and fowling it will be little diminished by the draining and for their turves and reed it may be much increased thereby and so means to set them on work will be infinitely increased thereby

Against : there is never an acre of fen ground but affords more commodities to the Common wealth than pasture of 20 shillings an acre does if all fowl and fish which is taken in England were valued, which though it be not all taken in the fens yet it is bred, fed and maintained for the most part therein together with the infinite worth of the reeds, fodder, thack, turves, flags, hassocks, sedge, rackweed for churches, Chambers, beds and many other fen commodities of great use both in town and country

For : this is a gross and palpable error for of Reed fit for thack there will not be found that is fit for use 100 acres and the like for turves. And for all the rest the beggarly lives that the poor idle wretches do lead do manifest of what commodity it is to them and their expense that is heard of draining and what commodities have been grown thereby to the poor that are industrious does confound it. It is true that for some few acres of Reed may be worth 20 shillings an acre yearly but what is that to the rest of the fens which are a hundred times as much and yet that reed and turf shall be continued to them still in 1632 when the dyke Reeves of the conservators first appeared no one was pleased Thomas Fries relates his experiences in Holme fen near Whittlesey mere. "at the time of the driving of the fens Mr Castle of Glatton a Justice of the peace came into the fen and told him that none of his cattle should be driven thence and appointed two of his men to stand in the gap where the cattle should pass and keep them from going out and he stood by while a great many women and men with scythes and pitchforks gave many threatening words that they would let the guts of any one that should drive their fens and while they turned back their cattle and he did not repress their disorder nor speak to them to desist. And since that times the commoners in the same fen have mowed the most part of the fodder there and have put a stock of sheep into it. It is commonly reported by the commoners in Ely fens that Mr Cromwell of Ely has undertaken, they paying him a groat for every cow they have on the Commons, to hold the drainers in suit of law for five years and that in the mean time they should enjoy every foot of their Commons”

Mr Cromwell had all along been opposed to the drainers and in 1638 at a meeting at Huntingdon he was as head of the malcontents in the fen business style Lord of the fens and he abetted the factions who with clamours withstood the commissioners; and in the House of Commons he supported the Petitioners of the commoners of Somersham against the Bill for the Queen's Jointure dated 1614 on May "our lands and inheritance are taken from us by pretence of laws of sewers wherewith the commissioners proceed without imposition by jury but take their own view, who are parties deeply interested. They take one half of our common and fen ground for supposed draining the rest, which they make and leave much worse than they found it. And yet expect valuation from our severalls. They bring our severalls under tax which are worth a Mark to 20 shillings the acre a year. Other severals they violently take from us to dig their drains through them against the owners consent and pay not any compensation for them. They disdain and sell our goods that come on the ground they have taken from us and will not obey orders to return them. If we proceed at law for trial of our titles we are sued and imprisoned and ordered not to proceed. Our consents are extorted to make us subscribe to their proceedings and if we gainsay they imprison us to fit matters to their ends. Our ancient commissioners have been put out and foreign adventurers and participants are put into Commission. Our salt marshes which have been enjoyed by us and our ancestors hundreds of years are taken from us and supposed to be gained from the sea. Our Commons are taken from us under pretence of Commission to improve for the King as Lord of the soil wherein they take more than half

Public events put an end to the stir in the Commons, which gave the fenmen some hope of remedial measures, but the King, hearing of the difficulties of the Conservators and the hardships of the people moved in the business. Touching this, Sir J. Bankes gives an account of his audience by Charles I :
"When I waited upon His Majesty touching the business of the great level his Majesty took notice of divers complaints that men and whole townships and hundreds were excluded from the possession of their lands and Commons whose grounds were not drained and whereupon gave us direction to restore such men to their possession until the land were adjudged drained which directions we have observed; yet so we admit none to this grace but such as make due claims that their lands are not bettered by the Earl of Bedford's draining and that they have their special order of the court for it and that they shall not pull down any hedges ditches or fences but make a gap and enter in a peaceful manner. This order is pursuant to the decree made when King James was undertaker and have given great contentment to the several counties"

A few days after this Charles I declared himself sole adventure: "23rd July 1638 and because His Majesty intends to see this great work of the level prosecuted according to his first princely design in such manner as may have just regard to the perfecting the same he is pleased to declare himself the adventurer as well of Deepening fen as the great level

The Royal adventurer had formed a plan for the reclamation of the fens; new plantations of people with ample privileges were to be located. An eminent town was to be built in the middle of the level, on the site of the little village of Manea, to be called Charlemont; the design whereof of the King drew himself, intending to have made a notable stream from thence to the river Ouse
The terms on which the undertakings of the Conservators was transferred to the King were notified to the commissioners of sewers by the King's letters patent

At this time of the year the fen is covered with verdure like a prairie and the undergrowth being dry it burnt rapidly until at one time there was nearly a quarter of a mile of fire. A few days later four university men said that one of them had accidentally thrown away an unspent match and the sedge where it was thrown had had once caught fire and blazed freely and that being wholly unable to put it out they had run away. York; a forfeit of £10 to be paid for every escape & monthly certificate of deaths to be returned. 1653 DUTCH prisoners, expert with spade allowed to work for similar terms; 1653 Bedford writes to Thurloe : The quartering in the villages where there are no inns and very few alehouses causes the opposition and disturbances where our works lye. The Dutch prisoners not only refuse to work but are encouraged by the country people to run away, hiding them in the corn ... and officers who ride after them and bring them back have no power to punish them. The Adventurers have been very willing to receive the Dutch prisoners, to free the state from their charge but they are so great a burden and trouble to them, they being resolved not to work, nor will work, and say they are prisoners of war, and ought not to be enforced to labour

Act of William III re repairing county gaols empowers county justices to make a rate, but does not authorise liberty justices to make a rate, which caused problems; 1759 Sir C. His Lordship gave no answer so they lodged petition on subject of assize in House of Commons, when Lordship gave assurance that afternoon that two assizes would be held. But prisoners still in difficulties : no provision and irons intolerable : the subject of picture. These result from ruinous state of Ely gaol which Bishop declines to repair though is the onus of the See of Ely and insists that the country repair. Starlings infested the place - millions. A single discharge of a long fowling gun loaded with shot killed no less than 27 dozen birds. Guns 6-7 feet long ... sledges in regular use. SKATERS could run down pike that could be seen under clear ice. Would continue for miles till pike exhausted; then break ice and haul out. Could see EELS on summer day. Large eels had 3 holes to home in the mud. One was a large one where its head peeped out and two small ones 2 feet away where the end of the tail would be. Gleaver for eels looked for these homes before striking with his spear; did not strike for head because fish too large to pass between blades of glave. So directed it to spot near two holes and invariably secured fish near tail. Small fish only had one hole. ADDERS swarmed about margins of lake - abolished by paying 2d for every one killed. 232 drainage of Gt Level ...Earl of Bedford and his participants and adventurers had sunk money into scheme & heirs rallied in 1660 to assert the rights and privileges granted by the charter of King Charles I to their predecessors. At restoration in 1660 necessary maintenance work of draining was authorised by two temporary Acts. A commission of sewers was issued - Earl of Portland, Lord Georges, Robert Phillips and Saml FORTREY and commons resolved that all the parties dispossessed, claiming under Francis Bedford, are vested into actual seizin and possession of their respective shares and lots & constituted Conservators of the Level. Commission of sewers kept works going until General Drainage Act in 1663. During interval many claims and offers made for the "Kings part" & lively contest between Old and New Adventurers about adjustment of their accounts ... Surveyor General suggested figures ... Lord Bellasis offer of £1,500 pa accepted

King desired to get the fen business out of the way. Earl of Bedford had been of great service Chas II at restoration pressed King to support him to bear the burden of drainage projects in which his father before him had sunk great sums. , King's speech 1661; New Adventurers accounts 1662 - for money expended for draining and improvements of lands purchased for non-payment of taxes since May 1649; 26 Mar 1853 level south of Bedford river adjudged drained & taxes paid from 26 Mar 1651

Old Adventurers, or partly dispossessed put in answer - books showed that somebody had received taxes and spent money but if on drainage or not who knows. Had also been buyers and sellers at same time. They had sold 2,700 acres of Sir Miles SANDYS land for non-payment of £843 tax to Thos Bales, a mere nominee, 2,000 acres of which land soon after the counterfeit sale was sold by Mr Henley to Mr Trenchard for £5,000. Where's the surplus? New Adventurers retorted that Sir Miles was a committee man and principal actor in procuring the Rump Act & joined in conveyance of 7,000 acres of his land. Considering troubled times it not easy to justify the great expectations of the New Adventurers. Petition presented parliament to disannul the "Pretended Act" and pacify the country by a happy composure by swallowing up the accounts in oblivion

Sir Miles SANDYS sen Deputy Governor 1653. His brother Colonel Sandys was governor of Worcester. His property lay about Willingham. In 1630 he stopped an ancient sewer that flooded Over fen and "when the commoners sought to make known the same unto him Sir Miles would not permit us to speak but commandeth us to be gon, or else he would make a proclamation and commit us by which means we were compelled to part and were not heard.. Sir Miles jun of Wilburton is described as "one who gave his life to the great work of the level

256* ELY in 1681, described by Thomas Baskerville. "from Mildenhall we went the bank way through the depth and level of the fens, a great part of the way being by the river side, it being May 1681 after a dry winter and scorching dry spring or else it had hardly been possible so early, and as dry as it was we could hardly get over the rotten bridges with our horses, being glad to alight for fear they should break through and tick in the rotten bogs under them, but they have another way to go thither in the winter, something further about. The level from Mildenhall to Ely being nothing but turf or peat it is by its insufferable heat and dryth having exhausted all the moisture out of the ditches it was so suffocating hot by means of the brimstone or sulphury vapours, we could hardly breathe or endure it, so that I generally think it was possible to have set the country on fire, the earth then so dry. As we rode along this bank we saw here and there some poor cottages and wretched farms where some poor souls, at a hard rate, do weather out a winter to look after the cattle that feed here. But doubtless here his incomparable fowling to make those amends that will undertake that pleasant toil, for the red-shanks and other birds were very tame and not afraid of us. Here is also good snaring of Jacks, for one saw an abundance for two miles riding in the ditches on this side of the town of Ely

At nine miles distance from Mildenhall, this bank winding about the river and not made a direct line towards Ely, we came at length to a place where this and another river met. Here on an old high wooden bridge we went over Mildenhall river, where were 2 or 3 ale houses for boatmen to refresh themselves, and about a bow shot below this bridge the two rivers met viz: - that of Cam and Ouse united below Cambridge and this of Mildenhall. From these ale houses it is accounted 3 or four miles to Ely, the way thither as before, lying in a bank of earth with estuaries on both sides, as most of the fens are, save what they allow at large for the way itself, where here and there poor men that have no land do dig turf or peat for fuel to burn. In this passage between ale houses and Ely bridge it was we saw so many jacks swimming in the ditches, between the highway and the inclosures. At the bridge, which lies about half a mile below the town we came into the winter way or grand road which comes from London and the country adjacent to Ely. On this bridge, it now being the time of washing sheep, was sheep to be washed. The bridge on which they stood was high, it may be 10 or 12 yards above the water, and from thence they were tumbled into the river within the compass of a frame of fir poles to keep them from swimming away till such time as they were cleansed by the washer. The men, as I suppose, stood on a boat sunk in the water middle high, for the water was deep where the sheep fell, and which being thoroughly washed, they lifted them over the frame and so they swam ashore

The cathedral is in the plane of a hill, but one street extends down almost to the bridge. The buildings are very indifferent but the cathedral is very noble. Over the choir there is a large round full of lights or windows mounting perhaps 20 yards above the body of the Church. The inside of it is very well repaired for the body is lately paved. There is one small Church more in the town and little else to be said of other buildings

The great trade here about is making of bricks and earthenware, for which purpose they have excellent sorts of earth. Been at Stourbridge fair I saw vast quantities of earthenware there spread on the turf, of all sorts to be sold, brought out of these parts

262 drainage of Gt Level the decree of Commissioner of Sewers at St Ives adjudging that Great Level drained was fortified by sitting at Peterborough in June 1660 declaring that all water pits, meres, swamps to be heritage of Earl of Bedford. A parching summer and fen mirage may account for the illusion that marshes had become meadows or pastures and that instead of flights of water-fowl were to be seen herds of cattle. Vested interests and a desire to oust the Roundheads lured the Old Adventurers to their ruin. Within these watery limits a rank growth of root and weeds had spring up, which for many a year had mocked the fenman's toil.. General Drainage act gave truce to battle of finance. Three Chief Justices of Kings Court were constituted Commissioners to determine differences between Old Adventurers and New "who do pretend to have laid out and disbursed for taxes towards maintenance and repair ... more monies that the rents and profits have amounted to since the conveyances were first taken. William, son of Francis Earl of Bedford - whose interests springing under Royal Charter or Pretended Act were in direct conflict - and his adventurers were created the Company of Conservators of the Great Level of the Fens ... with power to tax all 95,000 acres for preservation of the Level. Leaving out King's 10,000 & 2,00 for Earl of Portland the rest were vented in Corporation together with all ways, new rivers, cuts, drains, banks and forelands

Corporation were empowered to act as Commissioners of sewers throughout the Gt Level and to employ sergeants to summon juries and execute any process and further to use and exercise laws and customs and appoint such officers ... They were elected annually at Shire Hall, Ely, by majority of electors. Ownership of 400 acres qualified for office of Governor or bailiff, 200 for conservator. Only those who owned 100 acres had voice at election. Taxes varied - 4d per acre on worst land, highest 3s.4d.. In 1671 all land taxed at 3s.4d. When tax in arrears land sold by auction but land would go at no price and Corporation had to pay way out of their own purses. Continued till 1776 when authorised to sell forfeit lands for any price.

DENVER sluice with 3 waterways of 20ft each occasioned much contention. In 1662 when New Bedford cut a sluice placed at Hermitage, Earith; replaced in 1826 by new sluice and cast-iron bridge. This kept water from flowing down old channel of river and protect South Level from flooding in winter; but New river lying at higher level than Ouse at Denver the water from Earith fell into the Ouse - hence Denver Sluice. When land floods rushed down New Bedford they closed gates of sluice and the tide waters being shut out they dropped silt and choked up the channel. To save South Level St John's Eau was cut but that silted up in three years and remained till 1666 when 24ft drain from Soham Mere was cut and tunnelled under the rivers. In 1745 Mr Labelye reported the ill-designed sluice without any lock was the ruin of the navigation. Lieut-Col Dodson, employed with Vermuyden seems to have suggested Denver Sluice. He advocated the cutting of new rivers and use of sluices instead of banks. Light moor banks had always failed and gault was not procurable. It was he who devised drain from SOHAM MERE to St John's Eau, "so that this mere shall never come within 4 foot of its former heights in ordinary floods"

Old Fen sluices were intended to facilitate drainage; navigation was not within scope of authorities and sluices necessary to expedite flow of water to outfall. Old Bedford and Salter's Lode sluices, built when Old Bedford cut in 1630 were re-built in 1828

Mills or engines had been planted here and there by Company but not until 1678 Corporation resolved to employ them : "for better and speedier cleansing of drains the four surveyors of the level do buy each of them a mill made for that purpose. But little used in C17 and no proprietor had right to erect one for private use. In 1699 Greens Mill at Chatteris was presented as a common nuisance and its demolition ordered

Corporation went too far. New drains and banks vested in them but not ancient banks or drainage works and failed in a suit against Will Hyde, lord of Sutton, who set up an engine to cast water at Shire drain, Lincs.

In 1673 Gt Level was drowned and cattle removed to upland; no tenants would pay rent for adventurers land so large expenditure on permanent works to remedy breaches had to come from Conservators' pockets - so they borrowed. The Duke of Bedford the only asset of Corporation estate, his loans proceeded more from his graciousness than commercial sagacity. The Duke's debt waxed and the prosperity of Level waned; the poverty of inhabitants increased as commons were divided. 301 CIVIL WAR in Isle; Col Valentine Wauton ( or Walton) writes : 21 June 1648 : design of enemy upon Isle of Ely, a place of that concealment that if possessed by an enemy where they might head a considerable army with all provision for horse and man at their pleasure. He settled at Kings Lynn where repairing works. I spent the last week in putting the Isle of Ely into a posture of defence. I viewed all the passages into the Isle and caused breast works to be made upon every pass, and all great boats on the fresh rivers to be secured under our guards. I summoned in the auxiliary forces who made a good appearance, about 400 men, the captain and officers honest, ready on all occasions to serve the public but have spent upon their own estates all this war. I conceive if some course were taken for their further encouragement to be paid the days they shall exercise their men on, and drawn forth to defend their frontiers, the charge is not considerable, they having no field officers. The ordinary soldiers are tractable and willing to serve the Commonwealth if they might receive their just pay from those that find the armies who are much in arrears for former service. So that I was forced to send forth warrants for their speedy payment. I am setting forward to put the North part of the Isle into a posture, those that may be trusted. But generally they are disaffected as Wisbech, March and Whittlesey whom I propose to disarm and to arm honest men if they may be found. Colonel Hubbert and Lieutenant Colonel Dimond are the only men for the parliament, but over powered with malignants. I cannot see how that part of the Isle can be secured without a troop of horse upon their frontiers. Crowland and Whittlesey works are much decayed and part of Whittlesey fort not finished that if any enemy should rise within they cannot defend themselves against them, but for want of money they are not made so defensible as they might be. I had 40 barrels of powder, match and bullet proportionable lately from the committee of the army, which sends apace, being dispersed to Ely, Whittlesey, Crowland and Boston and 4 Lynn Guards, so that if there should be any sudden occasion I know not from whence we could be timely supplied. I have no means to send out a scout for intelligence but out of my own purse, that any enemy may come under the works for notice can be taken. I desire that ammunition may be with speed sent and those other things taken into consideration, the soldiers have great want of swords, not one

Prisoners in Dr Mawson's time fettered because of ruinous state of prison and Bishop reluctant to rebuild in case charge should attach to his successors. Drawing sent to Privy Council is missing but John Howard preserved copy. Remonstance of grand Jury, 1764 to James Foster, Chief Justice of Isle of Ely. Inhabitants long endured much suffering from corrupt administration ...The Prince of this Isle, as our King, has no fault, so our prelate governs by a council and they alone are answerable ... we look no further than incident which fell out in the parish of Littleport within these last few years ... Demand a gaol delivery twice in a year ...

Bishop returned no answer so petition to Privy Council when Bishop says exaggerated - if prisoners loaded with heavier irons than necessary to prevent escape he not bound to keep gaol in repair as never repaired by any of his prececessors; no proof he bound to repair gaol. Claim that Bishop made £500 a year clear profit : a shameful assertion. Dr Mawson rather than continue contention submitted and repaired the gaol until secular jurisdiction abolished under Liberties Act of 1836. Since that time a Commission of Peace, separate from the Shire, has been issued for Isle of Ely and prisoners imprisoned at Cambridge gaol

353 drainage : there were some districts which were so situated that no comprehensive scheme could cope with their hyper-saturated condition. The owners in HADDENHAM district petitioned parliament in 1726 & occasioned the first private district act. Level had been under water for 7 years and could only be drained by lifting and throwing water over banks by mills. Mr James FORTREY stated whole district 6,500 acres was drowned two feet deep; there was no outfall to draw it, the bed of the adjoining rivers lying higher than the land. Sutton at that time 4 feet under water. Average rent was 2s.6d. per acre, when drained it was 20s. Benefits from act developed slowly. In 1773 Wm Cole wrote "I have a manor in this parish called Hall's which descended to me from my father William Cole in 1765. I sold it about 1771 it having been drained then 14 or 15 years. I could get no rent and had to pay the taxes". The windmill was as uncertain as the weather. These private districts are laid out with sub division drains for each ownership to a main drain cut at common charge. This mill drain is embanked and terminates in the outfall river. There the mill is erected or two if necessary to work as double-lift. But the rivers could neither retain the water nor carry it away. In 1782 "the country is in as perilous situation as ever but without any breach of the bank the lands are overflowed from the soak form the rivers for want of a proper conveyance of water. Had the general outfall been attended to and 1/10$^{th}$ part of the money spent which had been laid out in mills and banks the country would have been saved. All we can do is to increase the powers of the engine and raise the banks still higher and let what will happen"
Navigation Commissioners never paid their way. C1810 First Middle Level Rivers Act, Barrier Bank Acts were passed authorising a general tax to enable the heightening and strengthening Old Bedford Bank. Toll paid on bridges erected in lieu of ancient ferries at Earith … Expenditure on banks had run away with money : they were always sinking. The carriage of gault for water-proofing the banks was so costly. In 1844 Second Middle Level Acts confirmed powers to execute works which have effectively drained the Level. The Old Bedford, 40-Foot and Counter Wash Drain were deepened with new cuts
356 MOORE map of Meres
357 drainage : 1841 Middle Level loss of crops and cattle by floods; WHITTLESEY MERE drained; RAMSEY mere drained few years earlier. 1862 Middle and South Levels finally separated by operation of Middle Level Act 1862. From early times the South Level has been more subject to drowning than other divisions. Since Westwater from Earith to Chatteris Ferry became choked Level has been surcharged with upland waters & New Bedford which eased St Ives made things worse for land from Hermitage to Harrimere . All towns in revolt. St John's Eau was soon choked and the tunnel drain made in 1666 soon ceased to keep Soham Mere dry; even Sandys Cut injured navigation so much from Ely to Littleport that rivers to Mildenhall, Brandon & Thetford became useless. Before Denver Sluice Thetford and Brandon gained livelihood by water traffic. The old drains in this level, Sam's Cut and Wicken Drain which carried upland water to the Ouse were not embanked.

Nothing could avail but banking the cuts and dividing the Level for drainage purposes into an upper and lower division. More than 20 Acts regulated drainage before the South Level Act of 1827 passed. The Middle Fen District was one of largest and Burn Fen divided into two districts. In 1766 drainage of 7,000 acres between Cam and uplands of Bottisham was effected by Commissioners invested with powers to tax, cut lodes, erect engines and staunches and licence occupants to erect hose mills. In 1778 gangs of barges were landed at PRICKWILLOW and had to beach on the bed of the Ouse till water came down. Surveyors blamed Denver Sluice whose dam laid 8 feet higher than bottom of Ouse but nothing could be done till South Level embanked. 1806 Act for draining fens between Brandon River and Sam's Cut. By South Level Act of 1827 authorised make new Cut from Ouse at end of Sandy's cut and thence to Sandhill End, another cut across to Littleport Bridge and a new cut for the river Lark from Prickwillow to Sandys cut. Commissioners could tax and take tolls on merchandise passing up rivers. Thus authority of Corporation was superseded in regard to 3rd division of Great Level

Centrifugal pump proved mightier than rivers had purged this watery land. Windmill was uncertain. Objects drainage to make peat fruitful and can only be done by means which enable farmers to gauge the water in drains so that it keeps the sub-soil moist within a few inches of the roots of the crops. A few "engines" are still in use, the abodes of sluice keepers. Of all the weary loads that penury can lay on a man the worse of all must be to live on cheese and garlic in a mill (1906). That fearful and pestilential canopy of vapours which hung over fenland in 17th century has left not a rack behind, and mist seldom smothers up the beauty of the land. The fenman, erst the shrinking slave of winter wading from islet to islet, sucking up infection from the spongy air is now hot summers sauling and journeys from farm to farm on the hard high roads, breathing a balmy breeze sweet with the scent of many flowers - L. Gaches

BANHAM told of getting full-sized 20-ton lghters up to Bedford or Northampton; inn dry seasons they were scraping along the bottom so sometimes made dam by sinking the horse boat across the river and extending tarpaulins to hold up the water. Then when it gathered could drag lighters one at a time by several horses.

Lightermen a distinct caste becaue lived and worked apart from fellows & worked while other rested. Have seen gang pass entire day lolling at ease with infinite beer outside Pike and Eel at Baitsbite while lighters loaded with "fossils" - coprolites; then in evening started to Lynn. Lightering trade was moribund because railway carried good more cheaply but "waterworks" took a new lease of life about 1860 when CORPORLITE industry started. They also staved off ruin from many landowners who had been affected by Free Trade

Work done at night and off hours because of tides at Denver. Encouraged horses by peculiar chant which began with deep note and consisted of constant repetition of higher one, so long as performer's breath held out. It finished with mournful wail on two notes

DENVER SLUIDE the point where quiet water ended and tdal waters began. Any man could attach horses to boat and navigate in quiet water but farm more skill needed in tideway. Peculiar difficulty to get through ruinous old timber bridges. The horse could not walk though tme - the bow line had to be taken in and put out again oon other side of bridge, so motive power failed just when needed most. The gang had to draw alongside the bank and a line made fast to a post from the sternmost lighter to ease them through. Sometimes during spring tides water so high there was not headroom under bridges and have to wait till next tide. At every bridge enormously heavy mast would have to be lowered and set up again. It had two blocks at the very top. These were only used on the tideway where gangs generally used three horses, two on one bank and one on other where width of river permitted. This work managed by special class called "berthmen" who steered and gave orders. These man, paid 10/- a trip lived in tap room of Jenyns Arms or at another pub below sluice where poker chained to fireplace either prevent fights to save beig stolen. Some slept in wooden pumping windmills near sluice, others in lightermens room or hayloft

When gang on the move the regular allowance at ordinary stopping places was, for the small boy or apprentice 1/2 a pint; for the bigger boy and horse keeper one pint each; and for the principal man, one quart. Fr places where they stayed some days and took and discharged cargo the amount per day was for small boy 1 1/2 pints, 3 pints for big boy and 3 quarts for man. Any beer beyond this they had to pay for. The amount of manouvering at Lynn before the building of the docks and introduction  of steam tugs was very great. Just above Lynn the river Nar enters Ouse, forming the town moat. Beyond this horses coud not be used and gangs had to be poled along if the bottom was within reach, or lines had to be taken out to bouts etc. The dock too was used by many gangs who had to pass along the whole length of the river front of the town, generally in a desparate hurry lest the tide should turn before they got to the entrance

For the upward journey was essential to start at dead low water or little before so as to carry the whole tide with them sometimes as far as to Earith and also to get through the bridges at St Germain's and St Mary Magdalen before tide rose too high. The horses in this case had to wait above the moth of the river Nar at the very edge of the water, down the steep bank. I have seen a horse roll down here and lie on his back in the mud, kicking all four feet in the air.  It was very hard work for the horses because the gang had to move faster than the tide or it could not be steered. Also at frequent intervals along the towing path - the haling-way there are jumps - wooden fences to keep cattle from straying and over these the horses would have to jump, encouraged by full-throated chorus from the lighters. The horse must pull hard up to the jump and then stand still for a few moments till his towing lines comes slack or he cannot get over; some horses are slow to learn this.

I first made voyage from Denver Sluice to Lynn by water - cannot remember any boats anchored permanently in tideway, but in the 1890s there were at least a dozen half-decked boats anchored in the very middle, very much in the way. They are used to catch smelts which come up river at certain times; a "stow net" such as used at sea for sprats is extended on a triangle of spars. I was amused one day to see a man on bank who wanted to go on board his smelt boat. He got into a little boat just where the green turf leaves off and the precipe of slimy mud begins. He rocked the little boat about, pushing with small scull over the side and shot doen some 25 feet into the water at the bottom. He wuld have to wait till at least high water before he could get back again

On peat potato ousts wheat whch cannot flourish with latent mineral ingredients of 2.9; on skirtland what grows well but has a coarse thick skin so runs to bran in the mill. Oats do well in a wet season. Cattle are few and sheep rarely flourish on a vegetable soil; the lambs suffer from rickets and the "yeos" from shoulder weakness. The grass contains too much coltsfoot for them and too much ground ivy for horses. Grass does not root deep enough to resist the snatching bite of cattle. Flax is an old fen favourite. The farm handds in summer earn about 1s.10d a day so they said 1884. Profits of farmer not pocketed by landlords # c.22

162 fen folk say was practice of old in fens to keep the town shears in the parish church. Commissioners of sewers complained those whose duty it was to rook, hook, haffe, rode and cleanse rivers from weedds regarded their own private profit more than public convenence. In 1619 decreed that river OUSE from St Ives to Littleport shold be suffiently roded, cleansed and weeds landed and all rushbeds cut up and taken away three times every year. And every town shall be provided of one pair of strong substantial sharp and well-edged iron shears containing 12 foot distance between the points to perform work

For 60 years had shot on wash; creeping up to flock of wild duck on one occasion he let fly with a muzzle loader and bagged 21 at single discharge. With another shot he kiled at one time 8 wild swans and in Bourne fen shot 42 green plovers in one night. Used to be 12 duck decoy in Cowbit Wash yeilding in ordinary season 5,000 birds for London. In spring he gathered backets of wild folws' eggs and at other times took quantity of ell, pike and tench # c.38 : wildfowling 223 CANUTE in fens : Knute's ditch most ancient public work of known origin i England was navigable drain connecting Peterborough with the Nene near Ramsey. Cut in straight line from Horsey Hill to Bodsey it enabled vessels to cross the fens and avoid dangerous shallows of Whittlesey Mere. Its site forms boundary etween Cambs and Hunts was then woundary of waters. It was Canute who ordered fens to be parcelled out to towns, the pasturage to be enjoyed in common, horn by horn and no town to dig or mow in the fen of another. adjudged all they saw was hurtfuly surrounded; in first of King James project set on foot and petition delivered as though it had proceeded frm the country ... Sir Miles SANDYS had many friends at court and King prepossessed it was a glorious work and for the public good and King made to believe the Isle of Ely and south side of River Grant was hurtfuly surrounded; but when King was hunting Lord Garret of Chippenham, Sir John Cotton of Cheneley (sic), Sir John Payton of Isleham and Sir Thomas Gee acquainted the Kng with alll the cheats of the undertakers, thet they being judges and arties had made many thousand acres which was the better by overflowing in the nature of river meadows to be hland hurtfully surrounded. That they drained and meliorated a little hurtfully surrounded lands of their own and prejorated ten times as much lands which were never hurtfully drowned before, and that which was not gross and palpable ... when the King was fully instructed he injoined secrecy and went up to the Parliament and discovered all the undertakers fallacies and concluded wittily : "It is just the same case, my Lords, as though a pack of thieves should give me £20,000 to give them a patent under my broad seal t rob my lawful subjects of £200,000 by wich I should perjure myself and become a thief and tyrant. Whereupon the parliament flung it out for a base cheating monopoly; somem of Sir Miles SANDYS fiends moved he might have satisfaction for the vast sum he had expended; Sir Edward Cook answered, Let those pay him that set him a work, and further added that it was fit Sir Miles should give compensation to the oppressed country for trying experiments against the owners consent. Aasks and answers number of questions; incoudes : fens as they are produce great store of wool and lam and large fat mutton resides infinite quantities of butter and chesse and slo breed geat stores of cattle and are stocked with hores, mares and colts and we send fat beef to markets which affords hides and tallow ad for corn, the fodder we mow off the fens in summer feeds out cattle in the winter. By which means we gather such quantities of dung that it inriches oour upkand and conr ground, which are contiguous halfe in halfe. Besides our fens relieves our neighbours, the uplanders in a dry summer .. thousands of cattle beside our own are preserved which would otherwise perish. So take away a thrd of our fens you extinguish our rents in our commonings houses ad our pastures and corn ground proportionably; besides thousands of cottagers which have no right of commoning must go a begging, which the owners connive at because they cannot prevent it, being so numerous. So that rape, cole-seed and hemp, is a Dutch commodity, and but trash and trumpery and pils land in respect of the afore recited commodities have proved a kind of scurvey both by land and water had the enemy continued in it and better manned and fortified it ...

357 the old barges were kept workng till they wore out and leaked continually so that they could never be left for many hours without being "scooped", having water removed with a great wooden shovel. Men would tell of strange voyages when the great tub in the fore-lighter was full of salt meat and not merely used to hold sails as in these degenerate days; when lightermen used to cmpare their salt meat with that eaten on lighters .... Sometimes in floods the horses were drowned n swimming across, sometimes n dry weather the horse-boat had t be sunk across the river to hold up water ... Some men were confirmed poachers. One man murdered a game keeper and as the gang went along they all loked to see how the fields were "bushed" so they should know how to draw their nets at night. As soon as the barges brought up for the night off they went and returned tired by mornng. I remember a tale of a maid servant who hung in chains with her heart inn her hand. Bargees are only class of men foundn in fenland and nowhere else - quite different from canal people. Bargees no longer what hey were : the railways have taken away their chief function; one can no longer walk the entire length f the Backs on barges, as once possible. Yet when one sees wheat field in fens being reaped by latest machinery and corn heaves beng put on board a lighter lying in river beside the field one feels water-carriage will still hold its own, even though the motive power may be a steam-tug or petrol motor instead of horse. Short time ago at Soham the open space at the end of the lode was all that the railway station is now and when the arrival of a gang of barges was the event of the week - A. Stewart

CDR139. HOMERTON COLLEGE. Doorstep discovery: Homerton College and CAMBRIDGESHIRE COLLECTION copy of MPV7, https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=4X2gVuqyu3A Homerton College, Cambridge, has created a research associateship for one year to examine the problems of the Cambridgeshire collection in meeting demands currently expressed by schools for local studies materials in his tory, geography and economics. The researchers will also consider the probable growth in demand in these areas as new syllabi are established at 16+ level, and the ways in which these demands might be met by the Cambridge local studies library, which is already very busy.
The researchers, three experienced teachers, each of whom will work for one term, will examine school needs — ranging from primary level to O, A and CSE work — and advise on how other authorities have moved to satisfy the demand — perhaps by appointing teachers to the local collection staff. All the researchers will be made aware of the resources of the Cambridgeshire collection and its organisation, and will be able to pass this information on to other teachers. Local Studies Librarian Vol.2, no.1; Summer 1983

A History Of Upton, Norfolk - 1891 - 185 pages; 28. Chronicles Of Theberton, A Suffolk Village - 1910 - 285 pages - The author puts the whole life of the parish in the different centuries before us, giving us details of the Church, the incumbents and their difficulties during the Tudor and Stuart times, the parish government, the folklore, and even the inns. He has much to say of the land owners, and the residents. He gives moreover extracts from the registers (which date from 1548) showing the names of the parishioners, and indicates by the prices and valuations which he quotes the gradual progress of luxury and comfort. This book, originally intended as the history of a small Suffolk community, will be found to be of special interest not only to East Anglians, but to all, far and wide, who wish to know how their forefathers have fared and carried on parish life from the time of the Norman Invasion.; 29. 1030. SKEAT, W.W. Chronicles Of Theberton, A Suffolk Village - 1910 - 285 pages - The author puts the whole life of the parish in the different centuries before us, giving us details of the Church, the incumbents and their difficulties during the Tudor and Stuart times, the parish government, the folklore, and even the inns. He has much to say of the land owners, and the residents. He gives moreover extracts from the registers (which date from 1548) showing the names of the parishioners, and indicates by the prices and valuations which he quotes the gradual progress of luxury and comfort. This book, originally intended as the history of a small Suffolk community, will be found to be of special interest not only to East Anglians, but to all, far and wide, who wish to know how their forefathers have fared and carried on parish life from the time of the Norman Invasion.

RIVER CAM. # c.15  Note: Abstract: This study offers a new understanding of the stratigraphy and context of the Pleistocene (including Elsterian and Weichselian) and Holocene deposits of the Middle Cam valley and provides a unique and detailed view of the sediment architecture of these valley-fill and interfluve sediments. The new insights into the geology of the area, including dating, pollen analyses, and sediment architecture, are presented with reference to a series of nine cross-sections through Holocene and Pleistocene deposits, as well as Cretaceous bedrock across the region. The structural geology of the bedrock and the stratigraphic arrangement of younger deposits are used to explain the landscape evolution of the area.

1928. OOSTHUIZEN, S. The origins of Cambridgeshire. From 'Antiquaries Journal' 1998 note: This paper examines the effects on the landscape of Anglo-Saxon immigration in a frontier zone, on either side of the Cam valley which formed the ancient boundary between East Anglia and Mercia. An examination of the place names, institutions and landscape archaeology on either side of the Cam frontier appears to reveal an unexpected degree of continuity in landscape use between the Roman and middle Saxon periods. This apparent continuity is more marked on the eastern side of the frontier which was subject to centralised East Anglian control from an early date, than on the western bank where political and administrative fragmentation is more easily demonstrable.

1932. OOSTUIZEN, S. Landscapes decoded: the origins and development of Cambridgeshire's medieval fields. Note: he landscape history of the Bourn Valley, just west of Cambridge, offers an opportunity to address the question of whether or not there was a complete break, at least in physical terms, between the field systems of Roman Britain and the common or open fields of medieval England. In unravelling the relationships between pre-open field and open field boundaries in the Bourn Valley between about 600 and 1100 AD, a significant step forward has been taken in understanding of the origins of medieval open field systems in general. It illuminates the processes through which the fields, woods and pastures that had developed over the prehistoric millennia and the Roman centuries were organised into a completely new landscape: that of the medieval open fields. Field work has uncovered preserved prehistoric field patterns in the medieval furlongs of the valley. The unexpected discovery of what appears to be an eighth or ninth century proto-open field pattern enables the formulation of a new model for the introduction of common fields in England.

This paper explores the social, economic, and moral significance of renegotiating the balance between 'wet' and 'dry', taking as its focus a particular British landscape: the East Anglian fenlands. The fens are a place where the Protestant Work Ethic has been inscribed on the landscape; labour cuts drainage ditches to bleed the peat, and creates productive land where once there was only feckless and lazy swamp. Or, to listen to the story another way: labour attempts to impose man's will on God's dominion, with disastrous consequences for humans and for other species. Through three stories – from the 17th century, the Second World War, and the early 21st century – I trace the flow of water, its exclusion, and re-emergence, and show that central dilemmas about the perceived morality and immorality of drainage persist as a key source of tension in the region, particularly given the emergence of projects to 're-wet' and 're-wild' the landscape.

This report presents the results of the 'Time Detectives' programme of archaeological excavation of 10 1m2 'test pits' in the Cambridgeshire village of Swaffham Bulbeck in spring 2012. The programme was funded by the Heritage Lottery Fund and was intended to enable schools pupils and adults affected by autism engaging with local charity Red2Green to work together to explore their local heritage. Over three days, more than 50 people took part in the excavations which provided new evidence for the development of the area now occupied by the village from the prehistoric period onwards. This appears to have been lightly used by humans in the prehistoric and Roman period until the late 9th century AD when a small settlement appears to have developed near the site of the present church. This settlement expanded north in the 12th-14th centuries, when a new planned extension, Newnham End, was founded. This period of growth ceased in the 14th century, when the new settlement may have been at least partly abandoned. Revival did not take hold until perhaps the 17th or 18th centuries. By successfully involving adults affected by autism, local primary and secondary school pupils and local residents in organising and undertaking the excavations, the 'Time Detectives' excavations enabled participants to find out more about autism and about their local heritage, and showed how effectively archaeological excavation can bring diverse people together. # SWAFFHAM BULECK # c.41: Swaffham Bulbeck

2024. BARROWCLOUGH, D.A. Expanding the horizons of island archaeology: landscapes imaginary & real, Ely: the case of the dry island. From: 'Shima' vol.4, no.1: 2010. Note: This paper takes as its starting point a definition of islands that goes beyond geographical isolation to consider islands as social constructs insofar as they reflect feelings of isolation, separateness, distinctiveness and otherness. Nowhere is this truer than in the case of the 'dry' island, an island that although once surrounded by water has long since lost its physical isolation due to changes in sea level and drainage patterns. Taking the Isle of Ely in the fens of East Anglia in the United Kingdom between AD 1200-1600 as a case study, and utilising archaeological evidence for diet and for the local Ely ware pottery, it is possible to reconstruct a cognitive mappa, which describes the perception of islandness amongst the island's medieval inhabitants. # c.44.2 # c.15.6 # ELY

2027. SMITH, D.M. The anatomy of a Fenland roddon: sedimentation and environmental change in a lowland Holocene tidal creek environment. From: Proc. Of the Yorkshire Geological Society, 2012. Summary: A Holocene sand/silt-filled tidal creek, locally called a roddon, excavated at Must Farm near Whittlesey preserves an unprecedented record of Fenland tidal creek evolution. The tidal creek was formed sometime between c. 4735BP and c. 3645BP. Its infill comprised centimetre-scale, laminated, tidal sand-mud couplets, numbering some 600 in total, with microfossils that show marine and coastal derivation of the sediment. The nature of the infill suggests rapid sedimentation that choked the creek system, perhaps in as little as a few years. At least three successive generations of roddons are present in the Fenland, suggesting at least three distinct episodes of tidal creek formation. The Must Farm roddon belongs to the first generation. A later, mud-filled channel was subsequently incised into the roddon, perhaps initiated by a marine surge. It quickly transformed into a slowly flowing river, as suggested by molluscs, ostracods and diatoms. Infill of this late-stage channel was slow, perhaps over about 1200 years between c. 3250 and 2050BP (c. 1300–100 cal BC), as shown by archaeological finds. The mud-filled channel superficially resembles late-stage, organic-rich channel infills visible on aerial photographs, but is wider and deeper and might have been part of a more substantial long-lived 'river', perhaps a tributary of the proto-Nene # RODDON

CHYC.03.03 Cambridge Independent Press Village Articles 1960

A 1960 Glimpse at Grantchester, Cambridge Independent Press, 1960 01 08
A series of articles on Cambridgeshire villages, the aim of which is to recall some of the history and to indicate modern trends.
Past merges with present in 'lovely hamlet'
Rupert Brooke … tourists plat an important part in village life
Church
Manor House … offered refuge for members of King's College from the plague
Earthwork on which stood a Romano-British house … Roman remains may be found here
Residents form a picture of Grantchester 50 years ago … was completely self-supporting with its own butcher, baker, barber, cobbler, blacksmith, tailor, wheelwright, undertaker, painter and glazier and general store. Today is left with two general stores and a garage on the site of the old smithy
In olden days were many small farmers and others walked across the meadows to jobs in the college, dug coprolite for munitions or worked in the Mill which was burnt down in 1928. Now four large farms remain, others been swallowed up
Very little building has taken place – just a few Council houses due to the restrictive policy of King's College … cannot allow extensive building. This has had adverse effects … younger population are forced to leave Grantchester Problem of drainage and sewage … some of the villagers still having to empty their own lavatories and dispose of their own batch water. It has to wait under villages with large populations have been dwelt with. The question of sewerage disposal is under consideration

Cecil Warburton, who died aged 104, rode from John o'Groats to Land's End on a penny farthing and walked to Cambridge

Linton – 60 01 15 CIP
Linton Blends Past and Present. CIP 1960 01 15
Linton … a village with a lively heart.
Once it possessed a Rural District Council and had its own blacksmith, brewers and shoemakers together with a coach and carriage building and a fertiliser manufacturer and a chalk pit. Today there is a radio factory, a mill and a flourishing shopping centre
Agriculture & dairy farmers.
There are families like the Days, Casboults, Dockerills, Chapmans, Pettits and Seaman-Turners
New housing estates have scarcely affected the character of the old village
It claims one of the oldest general stores in Holttum's General Stores, opened in 1739, and a clapper stile.
Workhouse, now Linton Hospital, provides accommodation for 168 elderly people
Developments include the village college.
Linton Milling and Corn Co is still the centre of a busy corn-grinding activity, many photographs of the mill.
An outstanding figure in the sporting word is Peter Taylor, a County crickets and old Cambridge Soccer Blue
Mr L. van der Straeton makes pottery

Willingham – 60 01 22 CIP
Willingham Lives for Horticulture: Cambridge Independent Press, 1960 01 22.
Nearly every village remains sternly independent, owning its own small-holding. Although many of the men may work for employers during the day, in the evening they come home to farm their own land, At the annual horticultural show they display their produce in friendly rivalry. The uncertainly of its water supply has been a serious threat to its livelihood. The bus service to Cambridge are inconvenient but the opening of Swavesey Village College accessible by free buses has been offered in the evening. The older people still like to stay at home. Detached villas, each with its smallholdings and greenhouses
A family will employ few workers beyond its own members. Family names are surprisingly few, the Jeeps are the best known. Once the village had four windmills, today there is only one due to the devotion of the Cattell family … they grind grain for cattle. His son hopes to run it himself when he grows up. Its British School and pretty cottages, loveliest of all is the church. Canon Bywaters is engaged on a compilation of biographies of past Rectors, in his book-line study are documents relating to village history from the earliest time

1960 01 29 CIP
Cambridgeshire Villages 1960 - Milton
In January 1960 the Cambridge Independent Press started a series of articles about Cambridgeshire villages.with an aim to recall some of the history and to indicate modern trends
Milton was featured on 29th January 1960.

Please make what use of this you may. Kindly remember where it came from – www.mikepetty13a@gmail.com

The reporter commented: One of the most striking developments in the neat, tidy village of Milton since the war has been the gradual growth of light industry.
There are firms engaged in a variety of activities – from making rubber Christmas trees to the excavation of gravel. Older businesses include a laundry and a firm of roof-tile manufacturers.
Most of the village's most attractive cottages have now disappeared and Milton Hall is now officers for the Eastern Electricity Board. Over two dozen council houses have been erected since the war while private housing has grown on a similar scale. It is expected the village will expand considerably in the near future.
Milton tomatoes are widely known and one of the most prominent growers is Mr E.J. Walkling who also grows cucumbers in his six acres of glasshouses. The biggest dairy farmer is Don Pearson of Fen Farm who owns a mixed herd of Shorthorn and Friesian cows. Labour is not too bad but good stockmen are hard to find, he says.
The urgent need for a recreation ground has aroused considerable controversy as maintenance would be a 'crushing burden' on a small village.
Being near Cambridge has hampered the development of social life in the village, though there are a number of flourish clubs including the W.I., British Legion, Red Cross and Mothers' Union.
An earlier survey of Milton life was conducted by the Bartlett School of Architecture between 1942-45; it was a planning exercise envisaging the arrival of a large factory as part of which they surveyed the existing village.

Sawston – 60 02 05, 05a CIP
The 'Town' Character of Sawston: CIP 1960 02 05
A centre of Cambridgeshire industry.
To the motorist Sawston appears as little more than an awkward twist punctuated by an extraordinary number of public houses.
That's the place with all the factories.
Sawstonians are opulent people. There are jobs for the asking and one family may have £60 coming into the house each week. Much of the money will be spent on luxury goods
Many families have come and gone according to whether work was plentiful or scarce
There are many Polish, Irish and Italian people … Mostly Roman Catholic, they have their own church and priest. The English people will be either Church or Chapel, both 'keep themselves to themselves.
Some names have endured in the village for centuries inscribed in the Court Rolls kept by the Huddlestone's at Sawston Hall.
Thomas Sutton Evans was a tyrant of his own, his industry was a profitable one, selling wool, parchment and leather. He set up a brewery and his workmen had to pay the landlord fourpence for beer. A protégé wished to be elected churchwarden … He set up a mineral water factory. When he died he left his widow penniless. A tannery.
Edward Twogood makes paper
Sawston paper is one of the oldest.
People come from all over the county by special buses
The Sawston Village College opened by the Prince of Wales … the villagers may have been hoping for a warm place for whist drives … but were disappointed.
Spicer's Theatre was built to show what the people wanted
Several youth clubs

Please make what use of this you may. Kindly remember where it came from – www.mikepetty13a@gmail.com

Development of its housing estates continues … a suitable place in which industry can expand itself. Simplex a completing a new factory … an odd-looking piece of planning outside the limits of the village but when the housing estates are finished it will become a harmonious whole.
More houses means a bypass
No attempt will be made to encourage people and industry …

Madingley – 60 02 12 CIP
Community Life at Madingley: CIP 1960 02 12
Happy village a little off the beaten track
Madingley can claim to be one of the most compact villages … but a thriving community with a host of leisure activities,
There is a very real community life and most of the village clubs seems to be in a healthy position.
The landlord of the Three Horseshoes says everyone seems to get on well together, the Women's Institute says the community life was added by its isolation.
The church enjoys support, there are flourishing youth and cricket clubs and concerts are held regularly in the Village Hall
Madingley Hall stands in a spacious park. During the university terms it accommodates about 50 men and women who are graduates engaged in research. During vacations it is used by the Board of Extra-Mural Studies for residential courses. Some are for the general public whilst others are designed for the teaching profession, the Services and persons engaged in industry and commerce.
A ghost is reputed to walk from the Hall to the Church.
The oldest resident, 93-year-old Miss Amelia Johnson has many recollections … people earned little money. The village school has changed very much when there was one room for lessons.
Madingley Feast was looked forward too by all the village and was marked with a festival cricket match against Lolworth and followed by a free-for-all battle.
Frances Barlow recalls how a cantankerous old lady who lived on the toll-house was called on by the Prince of Wales during a snowstorm.
Madingley Military Cemetery attracts thousands of visitors
Nearby is a well-preserved post-mill removed from Ellington.

Chippenham – 60 02 19, 19a CIP
Chippenham – a model village, CIP 1960 02 19
To walk along the main street is to be transported back to the gracious, spacious days of the Georgian era … the village retains its character, even in these days of pre-cast concrete
Chippenham is a model village
Here kings have been entertained and here a king was held captive … today it is a quiet and scrupulously clean little parish
Chippenham passed into the hands of Geoffrey de Mandeville … and the property of Lord North … Civil War where King Charles partook of bowling …
Admiral Edward Russell … a hearty lover of punch … planted lime trees and built a magnificent mansion … founded the village school with a passage connecting it to the church
John Tharp, of Good Hope, Jamaica, built a the present Hall … a considerate of squires
The present owner hopes to get a grant to modernise the row of Georgian cottages

Please make what use of this you may. Kindly remember where it came from – www.mikepetty13a@gmail.com

Chippenham Fen remains wild fenland
The Village Hall was erected in 1841 and the village inn is called the Tharp Arms
Chestnut tree, the ‘Union Tree’, planted at the time of Joseph Arch’s visit in 1874, he encouraged men to strike
Life revolves around the Park … the villages go to play cricket football and bowls and fish in the Park lake
Many families have lived there for generations …
It is an active and progressive village

Reach – 60 02 26 CIP
Reach has lost its renown: CIP 1960 02 26
Once a ‘city’ and prosperous mercantile port.
Reach is a strange mixture of past and present
Reach Fair
The Parish Council is a recent innovation … the main has been the establishment of a second cemetery.
Electricity was switched on in Coronation year but many continue using their familiar old stoves and lamps.
Village is served by one general store
The one school attended by 28 children. It was established as a school-church, founded in 1909, but the present church services are conducted in the school rom.
On September 4th 1958 the church was damaged by lightning. The stained glass windows shattered. A repair fund was launched to raise £400 to restore, It will be in use again in a few weeks. Whist drives and a tug-of-war over the Lode
There is one social club but no Women’s Institute or Youth Club as there is not a single open space where children can play.
There were seven public houses, now is only one and a Congregational Chapel.
Reach Lode with barges unloaded their cargo at the Hythe
Fen drainage scheme have left the stream only wide enough for the odd barge and even this has almost stopped.
Devid’s Dyke,
Coprolite and sedge but these sources have long been worked out. Farming the only occupation.
Population declining but those who do live seem to have a surprisingly apathetic attitude towards the village

Girton – 60 03 04 CIP
Girton – a friendly community. CIP 1960 03 04
City covets part of this village
Girton is one of the eight parishes by the proposals to increase Cambridge Council’s proposals to increase their area. The village is strongly opposing the scheme. An attempts had been made to annex the whole village,
The village has changed very little from 1814 to the end of the first world war. Since the war with more houses built a Council estate and the Thornton Estate the village has grown and is now approximately 3,000.
The casual observer’s first impression is of two separate communities, the church being the centre of the village proper and the other, Huntingdon Road, a dormitory suburb. The Parish Council states that newer arrivals have become drawn into the life of the village and the Rector said there is more sense of community

Please make what use of this you may. Kindly remember where it came from – www.mikepetty13a@gmail.com

Girton College
Anglo-Saxon cemetery around Washpit Brook.
Howes Causeway
St Andrew's Church
Littleton House School houses 66 retarded boys, now takes part in games against youth clubs
Girton Endowed School now being improved for the purpose of a church and community hall.
The Glebe opened in 1951, is still unfinished with an Infant wing still to come. A new swimming pool should be in use.
Jack North, 81, remembers when the Girton road was a track of granite chips.
He wants three or four more shops. There is no meat shop unless you want to buy tinned meat. The villagers are a friendly bunch
Activities include a Welfare Centre, opened in 1936, Over Sixties, Women's Institute, British Legion and others
The laundry provides employment for some.
Girton is essentially a village and will preserve its identity.

Welcoming village which is halfway house.
Gamlingay when a cluster of medieval-type cottages and a diminutive church spire presents a pleasant picture to the eye.
They talk about agriculture. The landworker's job is a demanding one. He cannot lie in bed after 5.30am and this explains the lack of 'night-life' … most people are in bed round about 9 o'clock. They grow a lot of potatoes and green vegetable … There are a few Land Settlement scheme but a noticeable drift from the land
Merton College is the largest landowner
Obtaining a site for bungalows to rehouse people living in huts in the next village. Since the war Council has built 80 houses and would have built more had not waterlogging of the site made this impossible. The rent of a Council house is expensive for a landworker, the 'differential' rent scheme means there are few demands for full-size houses.

Stone and Iron Age discoveries made here
Few Cambridgeshire villages has such a wealth of detail as Ickleton
Church, “sacring bell”
Has been little development apart from a few houses at Bird Close
Inhabitants take a pride in preserving their village and it remains much as it was before the turn of the century
Several manors, one Caldrees is up for sale. Hovels has been tastefully modernised. Some of the period houses which were condemned have now been reconditioned
Tom Brand, a thatcher, of Providence Cottage recalled when there was a blacksmith and a wheelwright. His trade has flourished ever since. There is a great demand for thatchers in this country today
W.C. Godfrey building firm can be traced back for 100 years, now erects contemporary houses and services farm machinery. They have a collection of historical items including a Georgian fire engine.
Today there are a number of activities.
No real disadvantage … is an efficient bus service.

One amenity the people do miss is a public recreation ground, there is one ground belonging to Chivers but this is frequently locked up. A piece of land used for allotments has been promised.
Little to grumble, shopping facilities are adequate, there are three banks and a number of public-houses.
Usual village organisations … Histon Football Club at the top of the Spartan League
Few buildings of historical note, the Hall having been converted into grain stores, and a mill.
Many houses erected in recent years, the Sunnyfields Estate having seen the largest concentration, but this growth has come to an end.
Two people: Elizabeth Woodcock and Moses Carter the giant
Older villagers remember their independent rural character … now a dormitory of Cambridge

Wilbrahams – 60 04 15 CIP
The Wilbrahams' Proud History: Cambridge Independent Press 1960 04 15
With new houses mushrooming among the thatched cottages the Wilbrahams present a picture pf a typical village development in Cambridgeshire at the present time. Things aren't what they used to be 20 or even ten years ago. There have been changes in character, population and appearance.
History
Principal landowners with about 2,000 acres are Captain & Mrs Hyde-Smith, niece of the late Capt R.S. Hicks, Deputy Lord Lieutenant and cricketer who have the peal of bells rehung.
Fine recreation ground and it is hoped that tennis courts and a bowling green will be incorporated.
Memorial Hall caters for indoor social meetings, Youth Club etc,
Church.
Few shops in either village, Little Wilbraham have one post-office-cum-village store, Great Wilbraham has three. Usual delivery vans seem to be adequate for those born and bred in the country newer arrivals are not quite so satisfied.
Two public houses.
Primary school.
Newer arrivals travel to Cambridge each day but hard-core of older inhabitants work on the farms. The whole rhythm of village life is dependent on the harvest … we are a very happy, friendly and co-operative village in spite of the usual problems
Little Wilbraham is 'a bit dropped off Great Wilbraham, the two to a certain extent still retain their separate identities

Village faced with an important problem.

Population … cannot grow because nearly all the building land has been used up. Most has come in the last two or three years and there are large caravan sites housing people waiting for new Council houses. Estates have sprung up and the slum properties have been demolished. The older residents seem pleased with the new alterations because, they say, it has brightened and livened the place up.
The amenities of the village are considered fairly satisfactory … the bus service has been described as “one of the worst in the country” … they are forced to walk 1½ miles to Meadowlands,
Teversham had a skeleton street lighting system, a sewage system which is to be extended soon and the best recreation ground in the county. This was opened in 1954 and water has been conveyed, the villagers dug the trench for it, being rewarded by two pints of beer … in summer a crowd of 500 watch cricket.
Residents: Mr Thulborn and Mr Marshall … and Corney Grain, the entertainer
The shops consist of two stores, a post office and a combined café and garage, deliveries of necessities, including newspapers as it has no newsagent.
Village societies … a village hall is to be erected near the Recreation Ground as soon as funds are great enough.
The inhabitants are employed at Marshall’s aerodrome, Woodcraft’ in Coldham’s Lane or on six main farms. One recent innovation is 12 oaks.
No one can say the village is an outstandingly attractive one, but it is a lively one

Swavesey – 60 04 29 CIP

Village sometimes a winter sportsground.
Swavesey attracts hundreds of enthusiasts to its Mere Fen skating facilities.
It contains a number of farming families
Church, Benedictine Priory, Castle earthworks. Nonconformist chapel.
School and Village College.
Street lighting
Labourers in the district used to carry their scythes to London to mow grass.
Farming, horticultural show.
Now only three public houses. The shopping facilities were much better than in the days when there were 16 butchers, but little else.
Development has not been very extensive, although a few Council houses have been built in recent years, some in replacement of the 26 houses which went down in flames in 1913.
Barwell Rubber Company is a family concern and now employs about 130 men and women. The output is about 1,000 remould tyres per week.
Prime Godfrey & Son started before the First World War. It is a transport contracting business, employing 40 people and has its own social club. The original horses and carts have been replaced by a convoy of 32 vehicles.
Village activities.
As some television enthusiasts may know, Jeanne Heal was born at Swavesey and a bygone vicar had several books published.
Swavesey had change comparatively little, its outlook brightened with the Village College.

“Divided” Hardwick & unspoilt Toft

Please make what use of this you may. Kindly remember where it came from – www.mikepetty13a@gmail.com

“Grouped” villages with distinctive characteristic
It is often the misfortune of the little villages to be grouped together, even the Church of England does it now, reluctantly, because of the shortage of its manpower.
Hardwick and Toft share the same kind of soil and farming.
Hardwick has no street lighting and no bus service. One residence lived in a Council house for 20 years and the only change he had seen was his rent had been increased. The Limes Estate has attracted many London owners, in the last three years some 15 new bungalows have been built. Almost all the householders were previously strangers to Hardwick. There is difference between the old village and the mile-long lines of bungalows dating to the 1930’s. The address may be Hardwick but they do no more than come within the parish boundary. To live in one of them is not like living in a village. Mrs Willis who runs the Stockholm Transport Café does not know the name of a handful of her neighbours.
Such segregation is due to the fact that there are two village halls – one for the old village and one for the ‘top road people’ … they were mostly townfolk before they went there and close community life does not come to easily to them.
During the war Pye’s opened a small factory to attract the women to do war work. The old village school was the only meeting place open to everyone. Then the little factory became a village hall too. At once the difficulties began. The two communities fell apart. Until some benevolent person builds a glorious centre, they look like remaining so.
Mr William Rook, the village postman, has integrated themselves. He went there from London looking for a home of his own with a smallholding. Now his post office appointment takes him to every home in Hardwick. He is Chairman of the Parish Council
The ‘bottom’ people have the disadvantage of walking to the main road to catch the buses. A small private company runs coaches on Wednesday and Saturdays, Pye’s and the Papworth Village Settlement carry of their quota of employees in works buses but everyone else must walk up the lane.
Hardwick history
Toft has the street lamps … inhabitants know how beautiful it is and improvement of the old houses is now going on. It is a beautiful village since its central green has been restored, unspoiled and quiet, the number of strangers has increased noticeably. Soon to be 24 new private bungalows … the newcomers will not remain strangers too long
Mr Norman Balcombe, the village grocer and postmaster speaks of the friendly way they have made a home in Toft. The Collets and Sparks seem to be the most extensive family groups. Less than a third of the villagers work on the three farms, the rest go to Cambridge. Mr Balcombe gives a Christmas party to children, everyone in the village is a customer of theirs.
Toft church … it is one of the pleasantest corners in old England

Castle Camps, Shudy Camps – 60 05 13 & a CIP
Historic Castle and Shudy Camps: Cambridge Independent Press, 1960 05 13
Two villages with feeling of isolation
These two small villages jut into Essex, the Parish Council would like residents for a bus service.
The villages run much on the lines of former generations. The main crops are wheat, potatoes and sugar beet and what developments have been restricted to a few small houses within the village boundaries.

Please make what use of this you may. Kindly remember where it came from – www.mikepetty13a@gmail.com

There is little connection between the two, they share the same vicar and residents attend the Mothers Union, but this is as far as the partnership goes.
Castle Camps
History, All Saints Church, Old Rectory, impressive house with two storeys and seven bays on each. Nonconformists.
Quite a lot of activities including a Men's Club … move too to inaugurate a youth club; two public houses, a third having been closed in recent years, several general stores and a butcher's.
The Church of England Junior School taken over by the County Council.
Population had declined. Some old cottages have been pulled down and some reconditioned or converted. Two properties have created an original and unique 'castle' with turrets and towers. The Haylock Park Homes, accommodating old people, were given by the late Tom Haylock.
Amenities are adequate but no gas and sometimes in the summer months there is a shortage of water due to poor pumping pressure, but otherwise there are modern facilities in most homes.
Employment on several large farms, much stock sent to Saffron Walden market. Girls cannot find work on the spot so they catch the one morning workers' bus to Haverhill where they work in Gurteen's Pye's or Addis'. A newer source had been created by the planting of fruit orchards in the vicinity.
A bowls club … one of the finest in the county.
Castle Camps is a village which has not suffered much over the years from contemporary innovations. It is by no means a backward village … a village of peace and quietude.
Shudy Camps history.
Dayrell built the large mansion reputed to have a ghost … one Dayrell family brought home a dark skinned lady who threw a daughter onto the fire.
During the war was used as a military camp. Lyddite Chicks Ltd bought the place in 1949 because it provided housing facilities for the staff. The company has four branches, the one at Shudy employing nearly 20 people … chicks are exported throughout the world.
Unfortunate rift between the Vicar and parishioners, the church only sees a congregation of three or four people; the parties cannot seem to compromise and are rather cagey of outsiders cares to touch on the subject.
The school is now under the control of the County Council and will be closed down as soon as the present teacher retires. Pupils will go to Castle Camps School but the villagers insist upon adequate transport. Some villagers would like the school to become a village centre
The village has one post office-cum-general stories, a garage, a hairdresser's, and a public house.
It has no clubs whatsoever and no recreation ground.
Farming is the main source of employment.
Some town inhabitants say there are few advantages about living in these particular communities

Unusual customs: until 15 years ago on Rogation Sunday an old man would walk the boundaries dressed in a top hat and morning suite. He would ring a bell, kick the school door and go to morning service.
On Valentine's Day children would go from door to door singing and receiving presents of sweets and nuts … ended with difficulty of getting sweets during the War.
Gooding … widows visit the baker, butcher and grocer and been presented with free provisions.
May Day celebrations and Queen.
River was an important means of transporting, also had a blacksmith.
Guildhall is most interesting …headquarters of the Church Guild, Parish Council etc.
Barrington Hall resided by former Lord Mayor of London who invited residence to visit.
Church aiming at £3,000 for restoration work
Complaints that religious interest is not very strong; two are working hard to revive a belief in faith heating
School is greatly modernised
Two public houses: Royal Oak and the Boot which boasts a secret passage leading to Foxton.
Usual amenities, shopping facilities, electricity and water, the only thing missing is street lighting.
Clubs … one unusual facilities is that of a skating rink built by the men of Barrington out of materials supplied by Eastwood's. It provides plenty of entertainment and has been a success,
Entertainment the village are very enterprising, one annual event is Christmas pantomime
Farming is one occupation although over 200 are employed in the cement works. Eastwood's famous farms employ labour. They are responsible for cutting the extremely attractive green and in Summer many picnic parties spread out upon it.
Barrington is one of the prettiest villages, its 600 population has little to grumble about,

Westley Waterless – 60 05 27 CIP

Westley Waterless: small and quiet: Cambridge Independent Press 1960 05 27

Westley Waterless … a single well supplied the water for the entire area in the garden of Orchard Cottage and villagers hauled their water from a depth of 280 feet.
One of the smallest and quietest villages in the area. The houses are scattered along one winding road and has no real central point. The large school building has been closed. A minority of the population is engaged on the land.
One public house, the White Horse which was known as the Trace Horse.
Village store and post office moved from the old site near the church to one nearer the outskirts of the hamlet. It is a typical village store selling everything from pins and bicycle wheels to cakes and candlesticks.
Blacksmith, J. Norden, now that the carthorse is rapidly disappearing his main work is confined to hunter.
Oldest inhabitant is Mrs Martin Mason, she cannot longer get to the church to arrange the flower

Croydon – 60 06 03 CIP

Croydon Was Once “In-the-Wilds”, Cambridge Independent Press, 1960 06 03
The village of Croydon has an extremely interesting past. It disappeared 200 years ago, all its inhabitants were killed off during the ‘great plague’
The population is about 230 and only a few work on the land, most are employed in Cambridge; there is a bus service only one a week. It is more than a dormitory village and has lost much of its character.
It has a typical village store, a Post Office and a public house, the Queen Adelaide.
It has a primary school but this is scheduled to close in two years time when a new one at Orwell is opened. This loss will kill a bit more of the village life. The school caters for ten children and is run by Mrs M. Barnes.
It has a Women’s Institute and a Youth Club founded by the Vicar of All Saints, the Rev. John Hornby. It is going extremely well.
The church is a humble building and in need of repair. The tower is crumbling and cracking and there are schemes afoot to have it pulled down altogether. It has a small Congregational Church.
The Parish Hall was erected in 1910

Harston – 60 06 10 CIP

Harston an Expanding Village
It was a small and peaceful village which produced a large quantities of fruit.
Harston has seen many changes, the 1931 population figure was 794, now over 1,200 mark.
Church, Village Hall, Baptist Chapel.
Village blacksmith, Harry Lawrence kept busy with shoeing horses for the local hunting and riding residents
Premier Travel Coach Company … Norman Thompson bought an old lorry and asked George Willers to put a roof and seats in it.
Fanny Cornwell ran the “Cambridge Carrier”, a horse and trap carrying parcels and people into Cambridge.
Gladys Ashby of the Queens Head noted changes. Were 18 springs but have all dried up. Do not know many people now who have come to live on new estate; our only real friends are the older people we have known all our life.
Owing to expansion by Fison’s Pest Control factory Harston boasts five public houses. Youth Club and Women’s Institute.
Self-contained includes a store which sells almost everything, a dairy, two nurseries, two garages and a bakery.
Remains a popular and sought-after village.

Weston Colville – 60 06 17 CIP

Weston Colville Back to Normal; Cambridge Independent Press, 1960 06 17.
Wartime bomber station and post-war refugee camp
A deserted airfield, rows of Nissen huts and a wood with hardly a tree in sight, leave a sad reminder at Weston Colville of days during and immediately following the last war.
This small village of 350 inhabitants would have remained in comparative obscurity had it not been used as a bomber station and then as a reception and dispersal centre for nearly 2,000 refugees, displaced people brought to Britain in the Berlin airlift have been given new hope and a new start in life. Today Miss Sue Ryder (now Mrs Cheshire) is continuing her good work throughout the world.

The foreigners were accepted by the friendly villages, as the years passed they have all gone, although a few did linger on till quite recently.
Weston Colville is now back to normal and even the airfield is being reclaimed for farmland.
It is a long parish with houses set along the winding road which has necessitated widening and straightening.
The very few Council homes are set back off the road and behind older ones. Thus the village has been able to retain its old picturesque look. Thatched cottages are in abundance but their owners are experiencing difficulties in keeping the thatching in good order as there is no local thatcher.
There is one public-house, the Fox and Hounds. It was a beerhouse till 1915 and was rebuild in 1940. The Three Horseshoes used to be famous for its shooting parties and the late King, when Duke of York, visited it with the Duke of Kent.
The primary school was built in 1868 and could hold 97 children. Customs include summer outings … now only one school teacher and about 25 children.
The shops consist of a Post Office-cum-store, a general store and a bakery but are substantiated by a large number of deliveries from Haverhill.
Amenities are adequate. There is electricity and in most of the houses water is laid on, though for some it has to be collected from an outside tap. The bus service is very good and the only thing that is non-existing is street lighting.
Primitive Methodist … Sunday School anniversary. Church shares one vicar with Westley Waterless. In 1923 the tower had to be built again for it blew down and put the church out of use for a period.
Church activities are particularly strong, although its situation at one end of the long parish is rather inconvenient.
Parish Reading Room, now used as a village hall, was built in 1885 and was at one time the premises of the Post Office.
Mr W.H. Hall provides a fine recreation field and provided a Christmas bounty for the sick and poor.
The Major Hall Memorial Fund was founded for the benefit of the Rector.
Many more people leave the village to go to work; there are no industries although the Norden family were traditionally the blacksmith, Clubs …
Weston Colville Hall was a regular Hawking establishment. It was sold to Lady Delamere. It has been modernised to a certain extent. Adrian Bell wrote about the village.
History …
The old mill was built about 200 years ago and opposite were some workmen’s cottages with three apple trees in its garden.
Transport used to be horse and cart, a carrier would visit in a horse=drawn cart. It was also used for conveying people to hospital.
The Horn Fair has become a vague memory.
Weston Wood includes oxlips

Horningsea: the river has been the cause of its most anxious moments … flooding; a popular picnic spot … welter of litter they leave behind. Animals have been injured by broken bottles, dump unwanted cookers. One boy kept himself supplied with pocket money by returning empty bottles left in hedgerows
It is an independent community, comparatively few work in Cambridge
Agricultural community, Monastery, Priory, coprolite
Some 300 people live in the village, only 40 being Horningsea born and bred, others from the R.A.F. station at Waterbeach, communal activities are dying.
Village Hall built by public subscription is now rarely used, sports
The hotel at Clayhithe attracts the younger inhabitants to its dances, Sailing and Motor Boat club
Toll bridge built in 1872, purchased by the County Council in 1938 and freed from toll and subsequently rebuilt.
Children attend village school then go to Bottisham Village College.
A church school is partially controlled by the education authority. Recently there was a movement to close the place down and send the children to Fen Ditton. Following rigorous protest the parents of the 30 or so parents has kept the school open although the children have to manage with earth closets and without running hot water.
The village is on mains electricity and gas, but not on main drainage, Buses are infrequent.
People come to accept these conditions. Supported by the six farms, the smallholdings or the two nurseries, the people have no need to wander far.
There are post office and a general store in the village, other goods being brought round by celivery vans.
Some two dozen Council houses have been built. The Council Estate has won the cup for the Best Kept Council Estate for three years.

Waterbeach – old and new: Cambridge Independent Press 1960 07 15
The sight of an aged person in the streets of Waterbeach is by no means unusual, for although it is an expanding village, a large section of the population are elderly, and on the whole quite fit.
It has all the modern amenities and is remarkable self-contained.
The population is always fluctuating owning mainly to the presence of the nearby RAF Station, the married quarters of which are within the village boundaries … the census has risen to 2,400.
Churches including Spurgeon's ministry.
With the arrival of the RAF Station the village became rather cosmopolitan.
During the war 93 bombs fell but not a single villager was killed.
Many work at the Station and rely on it for their living. If for some reason it was to close down the economic outlook of the village would be badly affected.
Agriculture is the only other basic industry.
School opened in 1952 with an infant's wing opened last year. Houses 250-300 children but the numbers are affected by the Station, they give the children a stable background and in return they gave the school wider experience. They are building small village pool. The large hall is for village functions.

Newton – 60 07 29 CIP
Newton "Has Real Village Life", Cambridge Independent Press 1960 07 29
Newton has been affected by rural development, and private enterprise and Council building have increased its population to 300, but this is a different proposition.
It is a little, almost self-contained, village with its own school.
Private enterprise had provided quite a modern shop giving it a facilities which do not exist in many larger places. The post office building means more to the old people because until it was erect they had to go to the Village Hall to collect their pensions.
The village sweet is more typical of village life.
The Village Hall used by the parishioners, erected as a memorial to the WWI.
Newton Hall home of Mr & Mrs Harry Walston but the present Hall in which the family lives was built in 1910. The Hall was taken over by the army during WWII and the family took up residence again for years after the war. Estate, of 2,000 acres is given over to Thriplow Farms, over 100 Jersey cattle.
Church, Church School.
Vicarage lives 93-year-old Mrs Emma Hunt who still uses oil lamps but is soon to have electricity installed. Has a good memory. Misses the horses, replaced by tractors. In 1920s classes for copper and brass beaters were held, it was a long and tedious job but the articles produced were most beautiful. It died with the aid of mechanisation, Newton is essentially an agricultural village. Most work on the land though some go elsewhere for employment.
Very little happens with a visit of a small fair and the hounds.

Dry Drayton – Quiet and Friendly, Cambridge Independent Press, 1960 08 19
Dry Drayton is only five miles outside Cambridge it is very surprised to find that it has such a lack of public services. Few of the houses have flush toilets, and some villagers (including the very old) have to go out of doors to get water from a shared tap. The bus service is also poor which is unfortunate has more than half the population go to Cambridge to work.
The villagers accept this state of affairs and would rather have it this way that become another Cambridge dormitory
Large Rectory, Church foundations are a little shaky, Baptist Church now a store room.

Unspoilt Gt & Lt Chishill and Heydon, Cambridge Independent Press 1960 09 16
Buried so deep in the country that a stranger is obliged to inquire the way, Great and Little Chishill and Heydon present a closely interwoven trio with common character, common advantages and common problems.

Please make what use of this you may. Kindly remember where it came from – www.mikepetty13a@gmail.com

At one time they were in the county of Essex. Gt Chishill and Heydon virtually merge into each other and one has to travel a few miles along a lonely and narrow country road to reach the five houses and church of Lt Chishill.
There is one Women's Institute, men's and women's section of the British Legion, cricket and football clubs and a ladies' cricket club. Great has a recreation ground.
Gt Chishill and Heydon each have one village store-cum-post office and one public house.. The school at Heydon is attended by only a dozen small children. The parents do not want to see it closed down.
Amenities: there is no street lighting but there is nothing to go out after dark. Water and electricity is laid on, main sewage is lacking but most properties have their individual systems, and there are plenty of delivery vans. The bus service is poor but is adequate for the workers.
Development: in recent years has been slow, just a handful of council houses being erected in each. This has not occurred in Little Chishill. At Heydon there is a more to restore some of the old thatched roofed cottages which give the village such character and quaintness.
Purely a farming area, there are no light industries and inhabitants seek work elsewhere.
The main landowner at Lt Chishill is Mrs Crossman; her estate of 1,500 acres is tenanted by Kenneth Duke, his farmhouse and her own Georgian styled home being two of the five clustered around the church.
Church services are held at the Church of St Nicholas even though the congregation rarely numbers more than 15.
Sir Peter Soame.
At Gt Chishill there is a Congregational Church with a thriving following. In 1798 the village was almost completely destroyed by fire but the church was saved and one bell cracked. The tower fell in 1884 and again in 1892 but was rebuilt.
Great Chishill windmill.
The village is frequently visited by famous stars of stage, screen and radio who stay at a place called Knots Fosse, the house of Hugh Beaumont, the theatrical promoter. Kathleen Long, the pianist, lives at Heydon.
Heydon is a truly rural village that has remained unchanged for many years to come. The church has had considerable restoration as it was hit by a stick of bombs during the Battle of Britain. It was restored in 1956. History of Haydon set down in a small booklet by G.F. Roberts.
To someone accustomed to town life, speed and excitement, it may seem dull. A corner of England completely unspoiled by time of progress where people wish to be left in peace.

Longstanton – 60 09 23 CIP
Longstanton's Changed Temperament, Cambridge Independent Press, 1960 09 23
Inhabitants of Longstanton have their lives changed for them by force of circumstance. Since the opening of the R.A.F. Station at adjoining Oakington, they have watched their small community life develop and increase.
It was in 1939 that the first planes arrived bringing with it a demand for better amenities, improved means of transportation into Cambridge, increased trade for the few shopkeepers and publicans and provided a source of employment as an alternative to farming or market gardening.

Please make what use of this you may. Kindly remember where it came from – www.mikepetty13a@gmail.com

In more recent years the building of 150 new houses as married quarters for R.A.F. personnel has expanded the village and enlivened the social activities. But they are essentially a floating population and do not have any deep roots and taken much interest in their surroundings.
Those people who have lived in the village are contented. They have no complaints and do not resent the intrusion of the Air Force, in spite of the fact that all day long the wine of jet planes can clearly be heard.
Education is at Hatton Park School. The old school has become a ladies hairdressing salon. Shops include several general stores, a newsagent's and two butchers. Villagers travel to Cambridge but the bus is full of airmen.
A new recreation ground has replaced the former field, on which there has been housing development. This includes a fine children's playground. Cricket and football clubs, a youth centre, Women's Institute, Over Sixties Club and British Legion enjoy satisfactory support. The R.A.F. cinema is open to villagers if they wish to make use of it.
Farming and market gardens constitute the main source of livelihood. Produce is gathered together at Cambridgeshire Growers Ltd which employs 15 workers. Goods are sent to London.
Last year the two churches were officially united.

Fowlmere – a self-contained village, Cambridge Independent Press, 1960 09 30
Fowlmere had a neat compact look, picturesque, tranquil and with much rural charm.

Behind the Manor House is the farmstead of the extensive Manor Farm. The Fowlmere Accredited Hatchery run by Jackson Bros. They family ran the 'collection of shops' and Jackson's Stores serve a district extending far before the village. They are now run by the Cambridge Co-operative Society. James Ellis made footwear over a considerable area.
There are other businesses and farms and the famous watercress beds. Quite a number go out to businesses. Fowlmere no longer consists entirely of families who have known one another and the 'floating population' tend to go out of the village form employment.

Two pillars which flank the front door of his rambling house were once part of the village church but where found in a field on the site of an old windmill. But where it once stood no one today is quite sure.
History, nunnery, church chancel pulled down, civil war.
Eltisley is a quiet village, or as quiet as the heavy traffic allow. It is known for its triangular village green used every week for a cricket match.
Croxton is completely soundproofed from the traffic. It is almost composed of this huddle of thatched roof cottages. The well would have been the centrepiece before engineers installed running water from a tap.
Croxton Park is a large red brick mansion, church an ancient building of stone.

Landbeach: the village without a pub
The Worker’s Educational Association and Impington Village College are arranging winter lectures on the village history.
Landbeach centres around agriculture and many small-holdings belong to the County Council. With mechanisation replacing farm workers, more of the young people are leaving to find employment including work at the extensive gravel works or the R.A.F. Station, Waterbeach.
There has been an amount of building development with a few Council houses, privately owned properties and restoration of the older, decaying cottages, following interest taken by the Cambridgeshire Cottage Improvement Society. Generally though building has been limited and is unlikely to expand because of the valuable farming land.
The need for a public houses has been dispensed with; landlords of the two left found that many customers found it easier to go to Waterbeach inns for their refreshment. This may seem an unusual situation in an English country settlement, but it is so,

Shops consist of a post office and two general stores. The amenities are satisfactory with the exception of a sewerage system.
Two places of worship, church and Baptist chapel. The Church School is attended by 40 pupils. Under the headmistress Mrs Jordan, it is a successful two-teacher village primary school.
Village school is the meeting place for the Women's Institute, the Golden Age Club, Youth Club and a Mothers' Union.
No recreation ground but Amateur Dramatic Group puts on several production.

Duxford changes in past 50 years, Cambridge Independent Press, 1960 10 28
An up-to-the-minute delta wing jet fighter roars over the medieval labyrinth pf streets and as the village blacksmith is busy forgings his own horseshoes, the modern Aero-Research factory just down the road is working on a new "stick-on sole" for horses.
This is typical of Duxford.
The chief source of livelihood has changed from the working of the soil to the investigation of aero-dynamics in the hygienic conditions of CIBA (A.R.L.) Ltd, one of the most modernistic building. It is a light steel construction in mainly one storey but the central production area is raised to three times that height.
The picturesque mill is owned by the managing director of CIBA and was a favourite bathing spot.
History. Customs, Whittlesford bridge hotel. Priory chapel was in ruins. St Peter's Church vandalism has left in poor state of repair but authorities will have it reconstructed.

Litlington – 60 11 11 CIP
Litlington's Co-operative Community, Cambridge Independent Press 1960 11 11
Litlington seems to have been 'by-passed' by the world at large. It is the quiet record of a village which has pursued its own methodical way, untouched by fame and untroubled by large events.
It's population (1951) is 778. It has around 70 Council houses, about 80 percent of them being attractive post-war types, and quite a number of –private residences have been built.
Steeple Morden airfield was built and there were considerable hutment areas tacked on to Bassingbourn aerodrome and Litlington parish was inundated with all these extensions. Clearing work has gone on but derelict sites remain.
One building, not far from the Congregational Church, has served very well as a Village Hall. Another on the Abington Pigotts road has been reconstructed to provide a temporary junior school. Rehousing has reduced the number of 'squatters' but some people still live at the "W.A.A.F. site". It is largely because of the war that the Litlington population is back.
Litlington name. Two churches, with Abington Pigotts have been a united benefice since 1925.
Roman remains. Burial ground. Manors. Huntingfields.
Side chapel furnished in memory of the Litlington men who fell in the 1914-1918 war.
Francis Drake. Saxon gravestone. School next to churchyard is no longer in use.
Churchyard has been very neatly levelled off. Local farmers lent equipment and all sorts of people helped in the work showing that practical co-operation is there when it was needed.
When major repairs were necessity, the tower was unsafe, the walls need renewing. An appeal for £4,000 was raised with the village raised £3,000. The work was done and the church now has a neat and sound appearance.
Present vicar, Rev. H.O. Punchard has been there for 11½ years. He is Rural Dean of Shingay and encouraged the meeting of denomination.
Congregation Church continues to enjoy strong support.

Many of the villagers have no great regard for the enlargement of it. ”It is now grossly overbuilt … now we have more public houses and a huge Council estates”
Fulbourn is self-contained and none of residents need to visit Cambridge. It has a large garage part of which was recently rebuilt, and a number of good stores.

Bottisham – 60 11 25 CIP
Bottisham’s Population Has Trebled: Cambridge Independent Press 1960 11 25
The population of Bottisham has more than trebled in size since the war and this could well be partly due to the Village College, now 23 years old. It is now practically 2,000.
The recently build housing estates have grown up around the College and have moved the centre of the village.
Bottisham seems to have taken the overflow of people from Cambridge and Newmarket, said Mrs H. Potter. “At one time my nearest neighbour was well over 200 yards away”. Now her house is only a few yards from her next door neighbour’s.
William Osborne, 82, recalls it was necessary to walk to Cambridge for provisions. Sometimes it was possible to get a lift in a horse drawn carrier’s cart. There were coprolite diggings and a fair proportion of Bottisham population worked there. But the mines closed and many left Bottisham in search of work, quite a lot went to America. Cholera outbreak.
Village College an active social entity but does not infringe on village activities like whist drivers. On the side of further education it has spread its tentacles into many surrounding villages and works with Fulbourn Hospital in providing classes for the patients. Youth club. Open every evening of the week. Used by clubs and societies. College tries to lead public taste and classes are run as the result of public demand. The day school has about 400 pupils.
The village British Legion has 140 members.
Rank brothers operate a small local ‘industry’ by making precision instruments as a side-line to their garage business. They are top open another garage on the Cambridge to Newmarket road soon.
Bottisham church, Congregational Chapel.
Manor, part of this beautiful building has now been converted into flats.
Old mill has not been used for 20 years. Ground corm but now in a state of disrepair. There is a rumour that someone is to buy it to convert into a dwelling hose.
Destructive fire 1712 consumed 20 houses with another in 1846.
Has had sewerage, mains water and electricity for a number of years.
Although big and progressive Bottisham has maintained a quiet and likeable atmosphere that many villages have long since lost.

Buildings, Church, Baptist Chapel. Rogationtide used to be a united service: would meet in the church and proceed to a local farm to sing and take part in a service by the Baptist Minister.
Village school history and buildings commenced, in 1954 the new school was dedicated. Now attended by 50 children.
Large number of Tudor houses, oldest 'Silverhorn', a key bearing the date 1350 having been discovered when the floor was renovated. "Pryer's Hold" is 15th century work and University Farm 16th century. Many have been well preserved retaining the character.
Parish Institute founded 1920. Village hall constructed through voluntary contributions.
Parish Council: one worry the non-existence of a speed limit, members concerned now there are two new estates.
Leys where medieval archers used to practices is half a mile from the up to-date University rifle range.
Village retains rural atmosphere and most travel to Cambridge to work. Are half a dozen large farms and the land is ideal for arable farming. No local industries or any major sources of employment.
Bus service quite good as are all amenities, with the exception of sewage.
A number of Council houses and in the last two years the village has seen considerable development with the establishment of two areas of new housing.
Post Office-cum-general stores run by Mr Bert Crick since 1949, a modern and "Conkers", a well-stocked store-cum-hairdressers by Fred Mathews. Further needs supplied by delivery services while a new garage serves the needs of motorists.
A number of societies and clubs. Horticultural Society started in 1955 to replace the Village Flower Show, Drama Club which is a great asset for young and old. During the war the W.V.S. was very active and the Junior Red Cross well supported.
As for sport this is rather lacking, the football and cricket clubs ceased to exist.
Two public houses, the Hoops and the White Horse.
Names include David Kindersley who did carving at the American Cemetery Chapel, Madingley.
Customs: Plough Monday, Valentines, Barton Feast Day.

Stapleford Changed in Last 10 Years. Cambridge Independent Press 1960 12 09

"A bed-and-breakfast" village was how one inhabitant of Stapleford described his home recently … this erstwhile small community has developed beyond all recognition.
The village which grew up around a few large farms has devoured them into itself and gone on growing. "You see the people go off to work in the mornings and see nothing more of them until they return at night"
Population is changing with one with many people living in Stapleford for only a few years and then moving on. Houses do not remain empty for long and the land that used to be so easy to purchase is also fast disappearing under building development. It is a little cheaper and is attracting so many newcomers.

Please make what use of this you may. Kindly remember where it came from – www.mikepetty13a@gmail.com

Population 1,500 and the number of houses occupied in 1821 is now almost the number on one new estate along.
With the new young families there are a vast number of children. The village school has had to be considerably enlarged. They are taught by five teachers.
Cambridge attracts the majority as far as employment is concerned, though a few work on the farms, for the Shelford Building Supplies Ltd, for Lee's (Shelford) Ltd builders. Married women find part-time jobs at Ridgeon's Seeds.
Previously they were connected with agriculture which continued until the outbreak of the last war.
All the local industries have died away, including straw plaiting, fuelled by a fire in 1819.
Shopping facilities are adequate though some would like a few more grocery stores. There is a post office, hairdresser, garage and an antique shop with mobile delivery vehicles for bread, milk, fish and meat.
Social and club life. Cricket Club is well supported. Horticultural Society organises Flower Show. Parent Teacher Association building a new swimming pool. Scouts and Cubs. No facilities for tennis or bowls.
Three public houses: the Tree, Three Horseshoes and the much-altered Tose reputed to be haunted.
Amenities are fairly good, the latest being the extensive sewage system which should soon to be made to serve the entire community. At present it is being laid and together with the wet conditions is tending to spoil the otherwise attractive face of Stapleford.
Street lighting is exceedingly good with sodium lights.
Religious requirement, old Church in remarkably good condition but lit by gas.
Churchyard closed, War Memorial.
Ancient buildings includes Stapleford Hall, old thatched houses and until the last war the old Vicarage which was destroyed by a returning bomber. Stone House, Middlefield. Windmill worked until 1905. Two cottages were occupied for 23 years.

Comberton Prepares for Big Changes, Hope that Rural Atmosphere will not be Spoilt: Cambridge Independent Press 1960 12 16
At Comberton many new houses have been erected, changing the face of the place completely and more land bears signposts announced it has been earmarked for building.
The old community is being swallowed up by the new. Houses must be built to keep up with the ever increasing demand. University research students living just inside the University's permitted five mile boundary.
Comberton has become the home of the most recent Village College. Young children are taught by three teachers.
Maze.
Shops: post office, two general stores, an electrical shop and garages.
Amenities adequate but lack of main sewage. New estates mean the old village will eventually benefit.
Two public houses, Red Lion and Three Horseshoes are left after several more became unnecessary. When the population increases another will have to open again.
Employment: farming, Alumabrite glass-house constructors and a large factory making children's clothes.
Crafts have died out.
Social life thriving with Village College and clubs. County Library.

Greatest improvement been the 50 Council houses. The ‘old character’ of Comberton are gradually gong and not being replaced. In the modern age people are brought up too much alike. There has never been anyone to give £500 for any special cause.
Ancient customs have died out.

Little Shelford can expect to improve still more with its increasing population. A fair number of Council houses have been built and is plan for a scheme for 40 private houses as well as bungalows for old people.
Employment in Cambridge on several farms, or at factories at Sawston, Hauxton and Fison’s Pest Control.
The only real industry has died out: a rope factory run by the Gall family, a member continues the work at Harston. When in operation there could be seen in Church Street a long strip of garden along which the rope was made.
Blacksmith and hurdle maker have gone.
With relatively little growth the village has not found it difficult to retain its pleasantly rural face. There has been development but it is not too noticeable to the visitor and does not seem to have had such a market effect on the older inhabitants.

Bourn – 60 12 30 CIP
Bourn: a Village Rich in History, Cambridge Independent Press 1960 12 30
Bourn is distinctive for the peculiarity of its Church and the grandeur of its Hall. Apart from this its importance has died until it has become little more than an attractive dwelling place for those who enjoy country life.
Little to provide employment, apart from farming and a considerable number of people journey into Cambridge.
Shops consist of a post-office-cum-general store, a sweet shop, a drapery establishment, another village store and a butcher’s shop. Two months ago the last bakery closed down. One of the few remaining cobbler’s shop is run by John Bright. Is a garage and two public-houses, the Golden Lion and the Duke of Wellington, previous it had six.
Old village school has been closed down and is to be used as a village hall. A fine new building has been built catering for pupils from Bourn, Caxton and Kingston, Longstowe will soon be included.
Amenities but a lack of main sewerage.

Considerable development but this is not expected to become too expensive in Bourn. New people join in but sill an element of reserve between them.
Social life active with formation of a Youth Club and Bourn Drama Group.
Parish Council hopes to arrange for a piece of land for a children's playground and land for a burial ground.
R.A.F. Bomber Station become extinct and much of the aerodrome converted back to farmland. Remaining hangars are used by engineering and pest control business.
Bourn Waterworks are of great importance.
History.
Bourn Hall a fascinating Elizabethan Manor House. Ghosts.
Church.
Bourn windmill. Variety of farmhouses and cottages, brook.
Population has increased but no fear of the place becoming so enlarged that it loses its present completely country atmosphere.

Shelfor d, Gt – 61 01 06 CIP
Great Shelford Changed by Development. Will this 'dormitory' be swallowed by Cambridge. Cambridge Independent Press 1961 01 06
Little survives of the old village of Great Shelford, it has been swallowed up by residential development. It has grown into a gigantic octopus.
It is a neat, tidy village, despite the development. Once it was a rural community with the bulk of the employment centred on agricultural work. Now many of the inhabitants engaged in professional pursuit and local light industries.
There are a few people who can be looked upon as genuine villagers. Generally speaking the population is a changing one, with many people moving on elsewhere. When they move on their houses do not remain empty for long and land that used to be purchased with ease is disappearing.
There is a large number of children. School improvements include new classrooms, sanitary alterations, modern kitchen and playground. But all the classrooms are full of capacity and the large staff finds their work cut out to cope with them.
Active social life.
Possesses one of the best-equipped recreation ground with a distinguished Rugby club.
Well supported Community Centre and clubs.
Church. Old houses.
Thomas Hobson waterway
Rose Macauley, the novelist lived here.
It is a go-ahead village. Ahead lies an uncertain future and probably a battle to keep it from being devoured by Cambridge

During the Seventies the Haddenham Farmland Museum interviewed many fenland people, particularly those who had connections with farming. The tapes were carefully stored but rarely listened to until a chance comment during an interview on BBC Radio Cambridgeshire, just before Christmas 2015, changed that. A volunteer from Chatteris, Gerald McMullon, helped digitise the ageing compact cassette tapes. Now many of the collection are available via the Internet in a collection called FARMLAND VOICES.

George Amory of Haddenham, interviewed by Kevin Delanoy c1978
Over half an hour of very good conversation of life before WWII including vet's horse struck by lightning. saddlers, horse breeding stallions to serve mares, brick works near Haddenham Station & rail to St Ives.
http://www.farmlandvoices.org.uk/George%20Amory.htm

Charlie Ashton, a true Romany, interviewed by Kevin Delanoy in 1978
Charlie travelled with his family throughout England; he tells of his dad volunteering for service in WW1 and his mother and siblings being left on the roadside in their horse-drawn caravan.
http://www.farmlandvoices.org.uk/Charlie%20Ashton.htm

Charles Bester interviewed by Paul Melton c1980
Charles was Parish Clerk of Haddenham for 40 years and here are his memories of the village. His book, "A History of the Parish" was published in 2000. He was a regular helper at the Farmland Museum.
http://www.farmlandvoices.org.uk/Charles%20Bester.htm

Len Burton, a fine horseman, interviewed by Kevin Delanoy in 1979
Len Burton lived in Hill Row all his life. Len was a typical Fen Farmer whose life revolved round horses. His family bred them for export and were judges of the Shire breed. He was chair of Parish Council (see interview on BBC Cambridge Radio). He gave funding for the formation of the Day Centre for older people and as a younger man was a founder member of the Haddenham Branch of the Young Farmers' Movement and a county bowls player.

Henry Ewart Drake (1900-1985)

Please make what use of this you may. Kindly remember where it came from – www.mikepetty13a@gmail.com

Henry Ewart Drake, born 1900 and died 1985, interviewed by his great nephew, Kevin Delanoy in 1980, in retirement at Hunstanton.
Ewart, as he was known, was the grandson of the steam entrepreneur Richard Drake of Sutton in the Isle. The Drake Empire employed around a hundred men at the turn of the century. They also manufactured Nosey, a food for horses made from heating hay and straw with molasses etc. The railway at Sutton brought in raw materials and the resultant horse-feed was sent by train to London where the firm's HQ were at Bow. Family disagreements meant that Ewart's father left the family business after WWI and set up in Ely as a taxi and haulage firm. Ewart's father realised that the internal combustion engine would supersede horse power and he developed the lorry haulage firm at Ely which was nationalised by the Labour government in 1948. Ewart took meagre employment with a farm fertilizer firm. Throughout his life, like his uncles and cousins before him, he was an active member of the Methodist church. Of interest to note is that Richard, his paternal grandfather, contributed a lot of funding to the building of Sutton chapel, soon to be turned into residential development. More can be read about the Drakes in the publication "Bog Oak Country" by Lorna Delanoy & Valerie Bloye (2003)
http://www.farmlandvoices.org.uk/Henry%20Ewart%20Drake.htm

Mr George Green, interviewed by Kevin Delanoy in 1978
George Green, a well-known Haddenham inhabitant, known as Greenie. Greenie sums up life in Haddenham before WWI; big families; poor Agricultural Labourer wages; worked for the Freemans, Ruanes and other farming families before volunteering at Newmarket, He tells of his two year army experiences in East Africa and the coincidence of meeting the vicar's daughter who was nursing out there. Twenty years later Kevin filmed there!
A good interview about the social side of a Fen Village.
http://www.farmlandvoices.org.uk/Mr%20Green.htm

Joe Haddock interviewed by Lorna Delanoy in 1995
Joe recalls life on a small Fen Farm and the changes he has seen. Born 1909. A small part was used by BBC Radio 4 in Archives Programme "Iron Horses" in 2001
http://www.farmlandvoices.org.uk/Joe%20Haddock.htm

George and the Goultys from Littleport , Interviewed by Paul Melton in 1977
1947 floods at Littleport; Mrs Goulty recalls taking possessions upstairs; problems of getting clay from Ely Roswell Pits to back up the banks.
- and repeat of George and Fred from Hill Row interviewed by Kevin Delanoy
http://www.farmlandvoices.org.uk/Goulty.htm

Essie Howe of Prickwillow, interviewed by Kevin Delanoy in 1981
She tells of just how hard a farmer's wife had to work in the years between the two world wars; no electricity, running water or public transport; everything had to be "done by hand". She stresses the importance of the Women's Institute movement and the role that the chapel played in their lives. She was one of the women interviewed for the book "Women's Work is Never Done" by Lorna Delanoy 2005 with introduction by Prof Margaret Spufford.
http://www.farmlandvoices.org.uk/Essie%20Howe.htm

Jack Reeve, interviewed by Paul Melton for Fenprobe in 1978

Please make what use of this you may. Kindly remember where it came from – www.mikepetty13a@gmail.com

Jack was born in one of the many public houses in Stretham. He worked on the land and married a local girl. He always said he was "content with his lot" and did not crave for modern accessories.  In his later years he cared for his invalid wife in their High Street home. They were both loyal members of the Over Sixties Club.
http://www.farmlandvoices.org.uk/Jack%20Reeve.htm

Jean Richards, a real countrywoman, interviewed by Paul Melton in 1985
Jean recalls her time as a Land Army worker in the second world war. She was an active member of the Farmland Friends and was responsible for its formation and charitable status. She received an MBE for her work with the Ugandan immigrants in the Seventies. Her role as area organiser for the Citizen Advice Bureau brought her to Haddenham where she continued to live upon retirement. Bee keeping and as a lay reader at Holy Trinity Church together with involvement at the Farm Land Museum filled her days .

Josh Scott , interviewed by Kevin Delanoy in his home at Littleport in 1981
Josh was one of a very big family (six sons and six daughters) whose father was a shepherd on the Welney Washes. After service in WWII Josh came home and took over the shepherding and wildfowling way of life.
He recalls the excitement of skating competitions when the washes froze over and men raced for such prizes as a joint of meat. In 1969 he was invited by Peter Scott (no relation) if he would take over the work of being warden of the New WWT Centre on the Hundred Foot Washes. He knows the Washes very well and recalls Will Kent, his uncle, and Ernie James one of the last wildfowlers.
His story is told in his book "From Guns to Binoculars" with a foreword by Sir Peter Scott.

The museum closed at Haddenham in 1992 after 23 years in the garden of 50, High Street and thanks to South Cambridge District Council was put in store; the blacksmith/wheelwrights shop was given to Burwell Museum; the replica saddler's shop (formerly Thurmotts at Ely) was transported to Iron Bridge Gorge and all Haddenham documents were handed over to the Parish Council. After five years the trustees led by Lady Hughes of Wilburton, and thanks to a Heritage Lottery Grant, a new home was established at Denny Abbey, an English Heritage site off the A10. Here the Farmland exhibits together with other Cambridgeshire items are on display and the Visitor Centre there is named after the Delanoys.

BBC Radio Cambridgeshire "Village Voices of Haddenham"
These recordings were for BBC Cambridge Radio with the interviewer was Paul Cobley, a well-known teacher of English and Drama. An excellent programme of local people who gave their views of the village. Included are parish officials, children from the primary school, tours of the roads and lanes together with music chosen to fit the occasion. A real peep into rural life in the end of the twentieth century. This was one of a series put out by BBC Cambridgeshire Radio in its early days, in the Eighties and it gave listeners an idea of some of the villages it covered. Many of the participants are now no longer alive and so this record is especially valuable. Extract made available with the permission of BBC Radio Cambridgeshire.

CHYC.06.0303: Time Was
Stories from Cambridgeshire and around the world; compiled by Trevor Littlechild & Mike Petty and broadcast on BBC Radio Cambridgeshire between 1989 and 1991

This was a remarkable series of 45-minute programmes that put International, National and Cambridgeshire news in context and linked them all to the popular music of a specific year
For each programme Trevor Littlechild researched national and international news for a given year and produced a script. I checked for stories reported in Cambridge and Wisbech newspapers that reflected similar issues. Trevor then added music from that particular year. This put a different perspective on both news and music. For example in 1926 the national news was of the General Strike. The Cambridge news was of undergraduates driving railway trains, coming back to College covered in soot. The music was ‘Black Bottom’!
I have copies of the scripts.
The ‘Time Was’ programmes were broadcast as a series of 45-minute programmes on BBC Radio Cambridgeshire between 1989 and 1991. I took cassette recordings of the programmes which I have uploaded to Internet Archive https://archive.org/search.php?query=creator%3A%22Mike%20Petty%22%20AND%20audio

Making History: The 1947 Floods
BBC Radio Four, 31st October 2006
Nick Baker and the team answer listeners' historical queries and celebrate the way in which we all 'make' history. A Making History listener recalls the floods on March 1947 in Nottinghamshire and asks why these are less well remembered than other natural, climatic events such as the 1963 winter or the 1953 East Coast Floods? Making History turned to the expertise of meteorologist Barry Grommet and the Cambridgeshire historian Mike Petty, who has researched the impact of the floods in badly affected Fens.

BARBER, David.
Percy Salmon FRPS (1872-1959): Photographer, photography journalist and writer: a short film produced by the Royal Photographic Society, March 2022
This short film commemorates the 150th anniversary of the birth of Percy Richard Salmon (1872-1959). Salmon joined the Royal Photographic Society in 1897, becoming a Fellow and was made an Honorary Member. For a period from the 1890s until his death he was active as a amateur photographer, journalist for the photographic periodical press, freelance writer and as a photographer recording his village of Melbourn, Cambridgeshire. He was sub-editor on the British Journal of Photography and editor of Photographic News (which merged with Amateur Photographer) and contributed to the Cambridge Independent Press and Chronicle.
The film has been researched and presented by Dr David Barber, who is connected to Salmon through marriage. It has been produced by the RPS. Making use of contemporary sources, Salmon's own publications and a collection of his photographs at Cambridge Central Library.  Barber reminds us of the prominence that Salmon had during his lifetime and the legacy that remains.

Published on YouTube: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=MVn9ZzG6_lo&t=258s
Percy Salmon was one of the most important of the photographers connected with Cambridgeshire during his later years at Melbourn when he contributed to the Cambridge Antiquarian Society's Photographic Record. Many of his local views are preserved in the Cambridgeshire Collection, though others of more distant places did not survive the upheavals following the library's botched reorganisation of the early 21st century.
